THE Manuscript Minutes of the Assembly of Divines, of which a transcript has been made for the Church of Scotland, are at present contained in three volumes of not quite equal-sized foolscap folio, and are in the custody of the Trustees of Dr. Williams' Library, lately removed to Grafton Street, Fitzroy Square, London. The volumes are plainly bound, in a style which was common in the latter half of last century. They have, in a modern hand, at the beginning of the first and second, the title, 'Minutes of the Sessions of the Assembly of Divines, from August 4th, 1643, to April 24th, 1652.' At the beginning of the third volume is found the more strictly accurate title, 'Minutes of the Sessions of the Assembly of Divines, from August 4th, 1643, to March 25th, 1652.' It is not very precisely ascertained how they came into the hands of their present custodiers. It was supposed by the Rev. R. Brooke Aspland, the late Chairman of the Trustees, that they were included in the rare and valuable collection of Dr. William Bates, which was purchased by Dr. Williams for his Library. In the unprinted catalogue of the MSS. in the Library, it is merely said, 'It does not appear when these volumes were deposited in this Library. They came, most probably, with Morrice's MSS.'

The volumes are pronounced by several competent judges to be almost entirely in the handwriting of Adoniram Byfield, one of the scribes of the Assembly of Divines. His name is written several times on the first page of the second volume, apparently in the same handwriting as the greater part of the volumes; and on the occasions when he can be shown to have got temporary leave of absence, the scroll minutes are continued in a different hand.

Though the Minutes are now collected into three volumes, each volume appears to consist of two or more fasciculi, which may originally have been separate. On this account, some who have not inspected them have sought to identify them with the fourteen or fifteen volumes of notes of the Assembly's proceedings which Dr. Thomas Goodwin is reported to have written. But Dr. Goodwin's son, who states that his father did write such notes, states also that they were in octavo;¹ while those in Dr. Williams' Library are, as already mentioned, in folio, and cannot in many cases be described as brief. Besides, full accounts of the proceedings, and even of speeches delivered in sessions when we know that Goodwin was not present, are given in the same hand as the other minutes.

The first volume consists of three fasciculi. The first of these extends from folio 1 to folio 149, and from session 45 to session 86; the second extends from folio 150 to folio 295, and from session 87 to session 119; the third begins with folio 296, and ends with folio 443, extending from session 155 to 198. The volume accordingly embraces part of the debates on the revision of the English Articles, and the first part of those on Church Government; but it has no record of proceedings from 1st July to 3d August, during which interval forty-four sessions must have been held; nor of those from December 20th, 1643, to February 15th, 1643-4, during which thirty-six sessions were held, and debates of considerable importance carried on.

The second volume appears to be formed of two fasciculi bound together. The first ends at folio 148, which is a blank leaf, having its outside soiled, as if by exposure and use before it was bound up in its present form. The second begins at folio 149, and ends at folio 297, and, like the first one, has blank leaves at the beginning and end. It is a continuous record of the sessions from April 12th, 1644, to November 15th, 1644, and contains the main part of the Assembly's debates on Church Government and on the Directory for Public Worship.

The third volume appears to be formed of four fasciculi, three only of which, however, are connected with the Westminster Assembly. The first, consisting of 140 folios, contains memoranda of the several sessions from 324 to 604, or from November 18th, 1644, to March 16th, 1645-6. The last thirteen pages are blank, and the notes of the proceedings are occasionally very meagre, though at other times pretty full notes of speeches are inserted. The second, consisting of 97 folios, numbered from 141 to 238, contains similar but generally more full memoranda (written out with some formality) of the sessions from 601 to 900, under dates from March 9th, 1645-6, to August 16th, 1647. In this fascicle six pages at the beginning and eight at the end are blank. The third, consisting of 148 folios, numbered from 239 to 387, and apparently a continuation of fascicle 1, contains somewhat similar, but usually more brief, memoranda of the sessions from 604 to 1163, under dates from March 16th, 1645-6, to February 22d, 1648-9, as well as of the sessions which are not numbered, and which extend from March 1st, 1648-9, to March 25th, 1652. These last record little more than the bare names of the persons examined and approved by the Assembly. The fourth fascicle, consisting of 40 folios, written in a younger and more distinct hand, or perhaps in several such hands, contains what appear to be scroll minutes of the Provincial Assembly or Synod of London.

The third volume is in many respects the most important of all. If it contains generally less copious notes of speeches, it has, especially in its middle fascicle, more regular minutes of the meetings, and is the only known record of the Assembly's proceedings while engaged in the formation of its Directory for Church Government, Confession of Faith, and Catechisms.

The 'Minutes,' with the exception of the second fascicle of this third volume, are written in a peculiarly hurried and indistinct hand, hardly more easy to be deciphered at times, as Dr. Stoughton has remarked, than the shorthand occasionally employed by the scribe. They are, with the same exception, rather notes of speeches and debates jotted down by the scribe during the session, along with the resolutions of the Assembly respecting them, than formal and carefully extended minutes. Still these notes, as proceeding from an official person, are at least of equal value with those of Gillespie and Lightfoot, and often enter orders and resolutions of the Assembly in a fuller and more formal way than they have done. The record in the second fascicle is more carefully composed and more legibly written, and may fairly claim to be received in the strictest sense as the 'Minutes of the Sessions of the Assembly of Divines' from March 9th, 1645, to August 1647, though even in it many documents or parts of documents sanctioned are not entered at length. It is round this, its central portion, that the main interest of the volume is gathered; and to the illustration of it, and the recovery from the Journals of Parliament of as many of the omitted documents as possible, that most attention has been given. In regard to the other portions which contain notes of debates, it is hardly necessary to add that the Assembly is to be held responsible only for its own resolutions and declared conclusions, not for the sentiments of individual speakers. These, when the sentiments expressed by many, may be a help to the interpretation of resolutions, though even then the Assembly is responsible for the resolutions alone; but when they are those of one or a few, they are not to be so used with any confidence. What the Sub-committee on Accommodation asserted in their reply to the Dissenting Brethren must be admitted to have a general application, 'This we know, that no member of the Assembly could give any other sense but their own as single persons, nothing being the sense of the Assembly but what appears to be so by their order or resolve; and that if one speak anything as his sense, the rest being silent, their silence is not to be taken for a consent' (p. 109).

The transcripts from which this volume has been printed were made by E. Maunde Thompson, Esq., Assistant Keeper of MSS. in the British Museum, and the Rev. Dr. Struthers of Prestonpans. But the Minutes throughout stand in the text as, after repeated and careful revision, it was fixed by Mr. Thompson, save that irregularities in spelling have not generally been preserved. Various readings or conjectural emendations which either editor thinks worthy of mention are given in the notes. Those who wish to see what the spelling is deemed to be by a most competent judge, may consult his transcripts deposited in the Library of the Church. At the meeting of the Committee in May 1872, a unanimous wish was expressed that the portion of the Minutes published should be so in modern spelling. Though not altogether without reluctance, we acquiesced—1st, Because, from the frequent abbreviation of words or parts of words; and the running of certain letters into one another, the spelling is to a certain extent conjectural, and must be given in modern form; 2d, Because even where it can be incontrovertibly ascertained, it is not that of the speakers, nor by any means the same as that used in their published writings, and notes of speeches preserved by themselves; 3d, Because a similar course appears to have been followed in editing the contemporary Journals of Parliament.

Where proper names nearly resemble the forms still in common use, they have been retained. With respect to some which vary further from the forms now used, the example set by the learned editor of Baillie's Letters and Journals has been followed.¹ Accordingly, Chillingworth has been substituted for Shillingworth, Cheynell generally for Channell, Chanel, and Cheinel; and the names of the Scotch Commissioners especially have been given in the forms which most nearly resemble those still used in Scotland.

The best thanks of the editors are due to the Trustees and Librarian of Dr. Williams' Library, Grafton Street, London, for their great courtesy and kindness in allowing free access to the original Minutes; and to E. M. Thompson, Esq., for the great labour he bestowed in securing a thoroughly accurate transcript; also to David Laing, Esq., LL.D., of the Signet Library, for much valuable counsel; and to Professor Birrel, St. Andrews, for kind aid in revising the proof-sheets.

The Index to the volume has been prepared by Dr. Struthers. Professor Mitchell alone is responsible for the Introduction, and also for the notes to the Minutes, unless when these have the initials of the transcriber or of Dr. Struthers.

¹ 'Here, and in the subsequent account of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, the incorrect orthography of the names of persons, as written by Baillie's amanuensis, has not been retained.'—Baillie's Letters, vol. ii. p. 102.

INTRODUCTION.

‘ON Saturday last, the Assembly of Divines began at Westminster, according to the Ordinance of both the Houses of Parliament, where Dr. Twist of Newbery, in the county of Berks, their Prolocutor, preached on John xiv. 18: “I will not leave you comfortless; I will come unto you,”—a text pertinent to these times of sorrow, anguish, and misery, to raise up the drooping spirits of the people of God who lie under the pressure of Popish wars and combustions. But we shall forbear to relate any of the points thereof, because we suppose his said sermon will be published in print for the satisfaction and comfort of all that desire to read it. The number that met this day were threescore and nine, the total number being (including the members of both the Houses of Parliament, which are but thirty) 151, whereof if only forty meet the first day, it maketh the Assembly valid according to the Ordinance.’¹

Such is the brief and modest account given in the Parliamentary newspaper for the week of the opening of the Westminster Assembly. To that great meeting of

The Royalist account is subjoined from Mercurius Aulicus for Friday, July 7, 1643:—‘It was advertised this day, that the Synod, which by the pretended Ordinance of the two Houses was to begin on the 1st of July, was put off till the Thursday following, being the sixth of this present month, that matters might be prepared for them whereupon to treat, it being not yet revealed to my Lord Say, Master Pym, and others of their associates in the Committee for Religion, what gospel ’tis that must be preached and settled by these new evangelists. Only it is reported that certain of the godly ministers did meet that day in the Abbey Church to a sermon, and had some doctrines and uses, but what else done, and to what purpose that was done, we may hear hereafter.’

divines and laymen many of the worthiest sons of Britain had looked forward with eager expectation for the removal of acknowledged abuses, and the restoration of peace as well as purity to the distracted churches. To it, notwithstanding many admitted shortcomings, not a few still look back with veneration and gratitude, as having nurtured Puritanism for the terrible conflict through which it had soon to pass, and moulded it into the form it has so long retained in Britain and America.

It is not my intention in the present Introduction to enter into the general history of that eventful period, or even of this memorable Assembly. That has been fully and ably, candidly and impartially, done of late by men of various schools of thought ;¹ and to be done again in accordance with the materials at my disposal, would require a volume to itself. Besides, it will come in time enough, if it come at all, along with the parts of the Assembly's Minutes which yet remain to be published. At present my observations may fairly be limited to that department of the Assembly's work with which this volume is chiefly occupied—the doctrinal standards prepared by it. The history of these, and their relation to the theological opinions of the time at which, as well as of the time before, they appeared, has never yet been made the subject of very detailed examination, nor could well be till these Minutes were again deciphered. It appears to me, that it may be treated of quite apart from the history of those discussions regarding the polity and worship of the Church which occupied much of the time of the Assembly, and which bulk largely in all accounts of its proceedings during the years 1643 and 1644. It should be of far more general interest than the other. It was the department of its work in which Presbyterians, Independents, and evangelical Episcopalians were most nearly agreed. The simple history of it should tend to remove misunderstandings which have long alienated those who were then so closely associated, and lead them again to think and speak more kindly of the Westminster divines, and the work they sought to forward, of uniting all true Protestants in the defence of the principles of the Reformation. I am not without hope that it may lead others to be less confident than some of them have lately been, that 'the Westminster Confession stands at an extreme point in the development of Calvinism,' and, 'though not like the Formula Consensus Helveticæ, a special polemic against the via media, was still as explicit and decided in its antagonism.' I only regret that I cannot well take up the subject without special reference to a paper on 'The Westminster Confession of Faith and Scotch Theology,' by the Rev. A. M. Fairbairn, which appeared in the Contemporary Review rather more than a year ago.

The facts brought to light in these Minutes have a rather intimate bearing on the question whether that Confession of Faith is 'so sectional that the most latitudinarian terms of subscription could not catholicize it,' and I trust may lead not a few in England to entertain a more favourable view of the Westminster Assembly and its symbolical books than for a long time past they have done. It may be admitted that 'the cultured intellect of the day,' especially in the southern division of our island, has to a very considerable extent changed the matter and form of its beliefs, and lost firm faith in much that we Calvinists still contend for, and in not a little besides which good Arminians were wont to maintain. But the question remains, whether the decisions of this cultured intellect must now be accepted as final, and at its bidding a theory of the authority of Scripture alien to the conceptions not only of the Westminster Assembly, but of all the Protestant churches, and subversive of the things most surely believed in them, must forthwith be accepted; or whether, as in the past, the cultured intellect may not again see cause to modify the views which for a time it has accepted. To those who are conversant with the history of opinion in our own or other countries, such revivals or reactions are not unknown. In the end of last century, more spontaneous than the later, but it was at the same time less carefully drawn, and often more polemically expressed. The later, if more logical, was also more critically exact and more carefully balanced. The main difference between Luther and Calvin arose from the fact that the latter came after the former, and had his experience and the counsels of others to guide and sustain him in those conflicts through which he had to pass.¹ But that he as well as Luther was first drawn towards the truth by the felt wants of his spiritual nature, and that it was only after the work of grace had made some progress in his soul that he set himself to the systematic study of the word of God,—and that quite as much for practical as for scientific purposes,—has been established beyond the possibility of doubt by his recent biographers. That his theology was a living growth, and not a series of additions without any organic connection, must be granted by every one who studies it; but that it was an early arrested growth, can be imagined only by those who forget that his Institutes, as originally published, were a very different book from what they ultimately became, and that it was not till his fiftieth year he brought them into the shape in which they are now.² If some, in their abhorrence of one of his dogmas, will overlook all that Hales, and Hooker, and Horsley have said in his honour, they must not expect to be allowed to ignore what impartial men among their contemporaries have freely granted. The Rationalistic Professors of ¹ 'What brought Luther to doubt in Romanism was the feeling of sin, and the impossibility of finding peace in the expiations indicated to him by the Church. He sought, and was in torment till he found, peace. . . . Calvin in this respect had not to seek; Olivetan perhaps, and Wolmar certainly, told him what Luther had found, and justification by faith was early pointed out as the solution of the grand problem. But to know the solution was a small thing; it was requisite that it should become true for him, for his own soul. . . . It was on this ground that the conflict took place, and to it apparently the Reformer alluded in the somewhat vague details he gave of the state of his soul at that epoch, in his preface to his Commentary on the Psalms.'—Bungener's Calvin, p. 22. See also Dr. Merle D'Aubigné's interesting and exhaustive account of Calvin's earlier life.

Strassburg, who are no blind admirers, and who in the edition of his works they are publishing are rearing a noble monument to his memory, have not shrunk from acknowledging him as 'theologorum principem et antesignanum.'¹ The earliest edition of the Institutes contained less of distinctively Augustinian teaching than the earlier editions of the Loci Communes of Melancthon; and the remark might, with far more appearance of truth, have been made of him than of Calvin, that his early theology was not so much a product of his spiritual experience as of his logical faculty,—a deduction à priori,—and that 'he assumed from Augustine certain principles as to the natures and relations of God and man, and built on these, by the aid of syllogism and exegesis, his entire system.' The Strassburg Professors call special attention to the fact, that those 'loci' on which the whole system is said by Mr. Fairbairn to be built, are barely touched on in the earliest edition of the Institutes.² Calvin's theology, therefore, must have had a basis and a character independent of them; and it is vain to deny that, leaving out of sight these mysterious topics altogether, there is much in his book and his system for which the Church of Christ has abundant cause to be grateful to him. Complementary truths are often found stated by him more exactly than either by Luther or Melanchthon. Even in the latest edition of the work revised by him, I question if there is any passage so strongly assertive of the doctrine of necessity as some which occur in the earlier editions of Melanchthon's Loci, and especially in that edition of which Luther said that it was an unanswerable book.¹

It is with Calvin's teaching, and with the earlier rather than the later forms of it, that the Confessions of the Reformed Churches are most closely to be identified; and though subsequent developments at Geneva, Heidelberg, and Leyden may not be unworthy of attention, it must never be forgotten that these, so far as they were supralapsarian, were only the teaching of individual professors, and did neither legally narrow the creeds of their respective churches, nor at any period command general assent in the Reformed Churches. At the Synod of Dort, the Professors of Heidelberg, in common with all the foreign deputies, expressed themselves decidedly in favour of the infralapsarian theology. Pareus, who was too old to be present, wrote a long letter, in which he not only expressed his concurrence in the views of his colleagues, but went nearly as far as some of the Bremen divines in the same direction as Davenant.¹ The Heidelberg Catechism, which was approved by the Synod, has generally been regarded as one of the most moderate and cautious of the Reformed symbolical books, as it certainly was one of the most widely received.

Besides the mere logical evolution of its principles, various outer events are referred to by Mr. Fairbairn, which 'combined to make Calvinism, on the one hand, define and ground its first principles, and on the other, apply and defend its conclusions.' 1st, It is said that the persecutions and civil wars in France and Holland naturally prepared men to accept a high and stern Calvinism as their religious faith. But it may be replied that they were Calvinists before the wars began, and that there is at least much more appearance of truth in the remark of Michelet, that it was their religious faith mainly which nerved them for the terrible conflicts through which they had to pass. 2d, It is said, and may be granted, that the tendency of the Tridentine teaching was not quite in harmony with the 'Paul of Augustine;' but it must be added that the Council of Trent in its decrees did not venture to condemn much, save certain supposed excesses of Luther and Calvin, and that the opponents of Augustinianism were so carefully watched by its defenders, that they gained but little direct advantage over them at that time. 3d, It is said, and may be granted, that the Arminian controversy did lead not a few Calvinists to carry their principles to a more extreme length; but it must be added that the controversy had an opposite effect on many in England as well as in

France. The letters written to the English ambassador at the Hague by Balcanquhal, one of the British deputies to the Synod of Dort, clearly show that these deputies were to a certain degree divided in opinion as to the exact extent of the death of Christ. Part were satisfied with the old distinction, that while sufficient for all, it was efficient only for the elect; and part, not fully satisfied with this, advocated views which it is difficult to distinguish from those of Cameron and the more liberal Calvinists in France. These last appear to have had the support of the ambassador, and they claim to have moderated the decisions of the Synod on the subject of the extent of the Saviour's death, as well as on that of reprobation. Their views were advocated with great ability by Ussher, Hall, and Davenant. They were accepted by many who were accounted good Calvinists, and among others by Dr. Edmund Calamy and Dr. John Arrowsmith.

To me it does not seem altogether so clear as Mr. Fairbairn would have it, that the Westminster Assembly meant definitively to pronounce against, or peremptorily to refuse to tolerate, these more liberal views advocated in its debates by Calamy and others. In fact, it was not till several years after the Confession was completed, and the star of Owen was in the ascendant, that, under the spell of a genius and learning only second to Calvin's, English Puritanism so generally identified itself with what is termed the less liberal view. This, I am inclined to think, may be attributed more to Owen's influence than to the direct teaching of the Confession; and among the early English Presbyterians there were not wanting several who adhered to the views of Calamy and Arrowsmith.

Let us now turn to a narrower field of inquiry, and following in the track of Mr. Fairbairn, endeavour to 'ascertain the relation of the Westminster divines to the course of religious thought at home.' It is granted to us that the original Reformed theology, both in England and Scotland, had been on the whole moderate, but moderate Calvinism or Augustinianism. Tyndall, it is admitted, was a pronounced Augustinian, and he, it is now coming to be recognised, was one of the main authors of the English Reformation. Bucer and Martyr, who, under the sanction of Edward VI. and of Archbishop Cranmer, were brought over to teach divinity in Oxford and Cambridge, and train the future ministers of the English Church, were both high Augustinians. Their published Commentaries on the Romans and on the Ephesians, which embody the substance of their University lectures, contain a predestinarian doctrine quite as high as has been generally taught in Scotland. 'Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer, were no doubt very mild predestinarians.' But Hooper and Becon, as well as Bradford, Dean Nowell, and Bishops Jewell, Sandys, and Pilkington, were more decided, and certainly mentioned election for other purposes than 'to warn the people against trusting to it.' A large number of the bishops and archbishops, during the reigns of Elizabeth and James, held similar opinions. The Irish bishops not only accepted the Lambeth Articles, but in 1615 drew up those fuller Calvinistic Articles of their own, which were afterwards taken as the basis of the chapter in the Westminster Confession respecting God's eternal decree. Thomas Rogers, the chaplain of Archbishop Bancroft, whose Catholic Doctrine of the Church of England is, so far as I know, the first detailed exposition of the XXXIX. Articles, gives a distinctly Calvinistic interpretation to Article XVII. His book passed through several editions, and was dedicated to the Archbishop. No one who remembers this, as well as what was asserted by the English deputies at the Synod of Dort, and what was admitted by Bishop Burnet considerably later, will be greatly moved by what is said of Archbishop Lawrence having proved the Article to be Arminian.

'In Scotland,' it is said, 'the earliest Protestant theology was of the milder Lutheran type.' But it appears to be forgotten that Lutheranism, when Scotchmen first came in contact with it, was not of the milder type it ultimately assumed. The teaching of Patrick Hamilton was no doubt substantially that of Luther; but both Luther and Melancthon were at that time Augustinians, and Tyndall and

Lambert, with whom Hamilton was more intimately associated at Marburg, were still more decided Augustinians. There is nothing in Hamilton's recorded teaching inconsistent with the theology which came ultimately to prevail in Scotland; and among the articles laid to his charge by Archbishop Beaton, there is one which seems to show that he held that doctrine¹ at least in germ, and another which is only explicable on the supposition that he favoured the views at that time inculcated by Luther and Melancthon, 'de servo libero arbitrio.'² The position of Wishart is more significant still. It was not Anglican in any distinctive sense, or else he was an Anglican before the Anglicans themselves; nor was it the early Lutheran so much as the early Swiss. He translated into English the earlier Swiss Confession, and by a few words he inserted in the title-page, has shown unmistakeably what churches he deemed most worthy to be followed by his countrymen. The position of Erskine of Dun may be still more determinately fixed. Whatever sympathy he may have had either with Anglicans or with Lutherans, he not only accepted the old Scotch Confession, and answered in the affirmative the questions put to superintendents and ministers, when admitted as superintendent of Angus and Mearns, and again when collated to the parsonage of Dun; but he also, along with other superintendents and ministers of the Church, met in General Assembly at St. Andrews in 1566, expressed his assent to the later Swiss Confession as 'most faithfully, holily, piously, and indeed divinely,' explaining all that he and his colleagues had been teaching during the eight years preceding.³ The incident just mentioned would suffice to fix Knox's position also, if there could be supposed to be any serious dubiety respecting it. It may be admitted that he was not so much a theologian as a statesman and patriot,—a prince not so much in speculation as in polity and action,—and still it may be contended that his acceptance of the predestinarian doctrine was the result of his own independent study of the Scriptures and the writings of St. Augustine, long before he came under the fascinating influence of ‘the calm clear intellect of Calvin.’ The suggestion that it was his love of the church polity and discipline of Calvin which led him to adopt as his own the theological system which was the basis of that order, as well as the assertion that ‘he never held that system in its principles and details, with the comprehension and tenacity of its author and his more distinguished scholars,’ could not have been hazarded by any one who had carefully examined his treatise, Concerning God’s Predestination,¹ the largest and most important theological treatise he composed. If he has stated the doctrine in more general terms in some of his confessions, he has in this only followed the example of Calvin himself. Indeed, I am not sure that, in any of the confessions drawn up or sanctioned by the Genevese Reformer, there is to be found a more terse and pronounced statement of the doctrine than Knox has given in the Confession prepared for his English congregation at Geneva, which is said to have been received and approved by the Church of Scotland, and continued occasionally to be bound up with Scotch Bibles as late as 1638. The following is the brief but significant statement to which I refer: ‘Which church is not seen to man’s eye, but only known to God, who of the lost sons of Adam hath ordained some as vessels of wrath to damnation, and hath chosen others as vessels of his mercy to be saved.’²

The most eminent among the early theological teachers of the Reformed Church of Scotland was Andrew Melville. It might have been supposed that, as the attached friend and pupil of Beza, he would have been tempted to take up an extreme position on the subject of predestination. But from his Commentary on the Epistle to the Romans, lately published by the Wodrow Society, it is evident that he, like

Knox, held by the more old-fashioned doctrine, and that his views on this head were not less moderate¹ than his views on the article of justification had been long known to be. With respect to the latter, Dr. M'Crie tells us that some of the ministers of the French Protestant Church had disapproved of the doctrine of Piscator, that it was the passive obedience only of Christ which was imputed to believers in justification, and consulted Melville about it. He replied that the opinion was one which might fairly enough be tolerated among those who were agreed in other respects on the doctrine of justification by faith, and his reply, with others, contributed to restore peace to the distracted churches. No one had more influence in training the future ministers of the Church for half a century than Melville, and we cannot doubt that he imbued them in a good measure with his own views. Mr. Robert Bruce, one of the most famous and influential of his pupils (and one who, like himself, suffered much at the hands of King James), certainly held the infralapsarian doctrine.² It is so far from being the case that covenanting Scotland could not tolerate the infralapsarianism of Strang,³ that it hardly admits of question that the same views were taught by Baillie in Glasgow and Leighton in Edinburgh, and by one if not both the colleagues of Rutherford in St. Mary's

³ It was something less even than infralapsarianism that Strang was charged by some with holding. Yet his dictates were not condemned by the Assembly, and Baillie expresses himself in the following sensible and liberal terms respecting the differences between him and his opponents: 'I do not like his withdrawing from the divine decree the act and entity of any sin, much less of free and indifferent actions. In this I think he sways too much to the one hand. But I fear those he refutes shall be found in else dangerous errors. He indeed handles these questions in such a way that I do prize the man's ingyne and learning much more than before, and think him now among the best scholars in the Reformed Church. It will be my endeavour that our Assembly meddle not with such subtle questions, but leave them to the schools.'—Baillie's Letters, vol. iii. pp. 5, 6.

College itself. It is quite true that the intercourse between the Church of Scotland and the Reformed Churches of France and Holland was very close and cordial, and was not without its influence on the theological opinion of the North. Yet the case of Melville above referred to shows that the Scotch divines could think for themselves, and, when occasion called, could give effective expression to their views; and that the foreign churches did not disdain to consult them in their difficulties, and to defer to their counsels, as well as to take several of their theological teachers and professors from among them. Considering how small the Scottish Church was, and how few theological scholars of any eminence the country had produced before the Reformation, I do not think we have any cause to be ashamed of our Melvilles, Rollocks, Calderwoods, Camerons, Boyds, and Colvilles (for these last three taught in Scotland as well as in France). Their repute in their own day, and while Latin continued to be the language of learned Europe, was quite as great as that of most of their contemporaries in South Britain. Principal Smeton's defence of the Reformed Church of Scotland against the calumnies of the apostate Hamilton,¹ is appreciably different in its views from similar works published on the Continent, and yet it was highly valued there. Calderwood's Altare Damascenum was still more highly valued there, and it will not be thought meanly of yet by any who have the patience to read it. The Commentaries of Rollock were republished at Geneva and elsewhere on the Continent. Several of Cameron's minor works were deemed worthy of being translated into English, and published at Oxford; and Bishop Hall has admitted that this distinguished scholar was an honour to his country. Boyd, in his Commentary on the Ephesians, which doubtless formed in part at least the substance of his theological lectures, draws far more largely on Augustine, Prosper, and Fulgentius, than on Calvin or Beza, for the confirmation of his predestinarian views, as does also Dr. John Forbes of Aberdeen, who, though deposed for refusing to take the Covenant, was not charged with unsoundness in doctrine. Nay, in Holland itself opinion had considerably moderated before the meeting of the Westminster Assembly, and the Synopsis Purioris Theologiæ,—a decidedly infralapsarian treatise,—then in its third edition, was generally accepted in Britain as fairly representing the opinions of the Dutch divines.¹ Even the opinions of more liberal French Calvinists were so far from being decisively pronounced against by the English Puritans, that Baillie in the most express terms admits they were viewed with favour by many in the Westminster Assembly itself; and though he may not have made sufficient allowance for the fact that there were native influences predisposing to these opinions, and that they were derived from Davenant and Ussher more than from Cameron or his pupil, his testimony must be accepted as substantially correct.²

¹ 'Diligenter notandum est hanc præteritionem non omnem gratiam in præteritis tollere aut negare, sed eam tantum quæ electis est peculiaris. Ea vero, quæ per communis providentiæ administrationem, sive sub lege naturæ sive sub gratia Evangelica, hominibus vario dimenso dispensatur, per hunc præteritionis actum non adimitur, sed potius præsupponitur; quia non electi, sub illa communi providentiæ divinæ gubernatione et arbitrii sui exercitio relinquuntur. Hæc autem communis providentiæ administratio eam beneficiorum externorum atque internorum communicationem semper conjunctam habet, quæ in naturâ quidem integra ad salutem sufficiebat, ut in angelis rejectis et genere humano toto in primo parente ante lapsum considerato manifestum est; in natura vero corrupta, tanta reliqua facta est, aut naturæ sub Evangelio superaddita, ut omni excusationis prætextu coram divino judicio nudati ac privati sint.' That was the avowed teaching, not of Amyraut, but of Rivet and the other Leyden Professors, at the time of the Westminster Assembly. Has Dr. Crawford done anything more than state the same thing in other words, when he says that on our principles the atonement does as much for ALL, as on the principles of our opponents it does for ANY, and that 'the common benefits held by' Arminians and semi-Arminians 'to flow from the Redeemer's sacrifice to all mankind, are really no other than those which we, who differ from them respecting the destination of the atonement, do nevertheless admit to have flowed from it with the same unrestricted and indiscriminate universality'? See his Fatherhood of God, p. 369.

² 'Unhappily Amyraut's questions are brought in on our Assembly. Many more loves their fancies here than I did expect. It falls out ill that Spanheim's book is so long a-coming out; whileas Amyraut's treatise goes in the Assembly from hand to hand.'—Baillie's Letters, vol. ii. p. 324.

The Westminster Assembly was called together chiefly for two purposes: viz. 1st, To vindicate the doctrine of the Church of England from misrepresentation, and to show that it was in harmony with that of the other Reformed Churches; and, 2d, To effect such changes on her polity and worship as would bring her into closer union with the Church of Scotland and the Reformed Churches on the Continent. Of course the Assembly was not intended to embrace those who were charged with having corrupted the doctrine of the English Reformers, enforced the observance of the old ceremonies with a rigour which had not been attempted in former times, and imposed many new ones, which, if not meant, like the Scotch Prayer-Book¹ and Canons, to widen the gulf between them and their Puritan brethren, and to prepare the way for the restoration of semi-Popish doctrines and practices, were, to say the least, singularly ill-timed.

¹ One, of whom no friend of the Church of Scotland will speak save in terms of honour and esteem, even when constrained to differ from him, has maintained that, with one exception, this Prayer-Book was not, as is often erroneously supposed by both sides, more Roman and less Protestant than the English, but in all essential points more Protestant and less Roman. It has been replied to him that it does not much matter if it were so, as at any rate it was attempted to be forced in without the authority of the Kirk. This, however, was not the chief argument then put in the foreground, nor was it that which united the nation almost as one man against it. Much was said by Baillie and Gillespie of the character of the book and its ceremonies, and, it humbly appears to me, can be no more gainsaid than can the fact that it was from this source several alterations favouring High Church views were introduced into the English Prayer-Book of 1661. It may be admitted that in the Scottish Prayer-Book of 1637, commonly known as Laud's Liturgy, several important concessions were made to Scottish feelings and prejudices, and that one or two substantial improvements were introduced. The epistles, gospels, and the prose psalms were all taken from King James' version, and not from the earlier versions retained at that time in the English book. The lessons from the Apocrypha, if not altogether omitted, were certainly reduced to a minimum, though, while the principle of reading it as Holy Scripture was asserted, the question of maximum or minimum was one of little moment. The word 'presbyter' was also substituted for that of 'priest,' and required to be so to give the book a chance in Scotland; but if ever there was a case in which new presbyter was but old priest writ large, it was in this book. The rubric of the Edwardian Liturgy, 'The absolution or remission of sins to be pronounced by the minister alone,' was changed into, 'The absolution or remission of sins to be pronounced by the presbyter alone, he standing up and turning himself to the people, but they still remaining

They who had pledged themselves to the policy of Laud in these matters, and regarded themselves as bound by oath not to consent to any alteration of the government and doctrine of the Church, could hardly expect to be asked to attend; but all other parties within the Church were meant to be fairly represented in the Assembly. The prevailing opinion has been, that the members of it were chosen from the several counties by the members of Parliament for these counties, and the burghs within them. The balance of the evidence seems to me to be in favour of this opinion. Yet, in a pamphlet bearing date 16th May 1642, and entitled His Majesty's Resolution concerning the Establishment of Religion and Church Government, I find it stated that he 'hath consented that the main matters of difference which have occasioned all humbly upon their knees;' and this, with the change of presbyter into priest, is substantially in the English book now. The prayer, 'Almighty and everlasting God, who alone workest great marvels,' etc., was furnished with the title, 'A Prayer for the holy Clergy;' and for 'bishops and curates' it read, 'bishops, presbyters, and curates.' The petition in the Edwardian Litany, and in the prayer for 'the whole state of Christ's Church militant here in earth,' for 'all bishops, pastors, and ministers of the Church,' was changed into one for all 'bishops, presbyters, and ministers of the Church;' and this in the English book of 1661 passed into 'all bishops, priests, and deacons,' in which form it has ever since continued. The Scottish form of ordination composed in 1620, which 'left out the most essential words in conferring priests' orders,' or rather which did not profess to confer priests' orders at all, but only to ordain ministers, was so far from being approved of by Laud, that it was ordered to be superseded on that very account. It is, however, in the Communion office that the true character and tendency of the book especially comes out. Beyond all question, it was modelled on, and in a great measure taken from, that in the first Prayer-Book of Edward VI. That was so far from being more Protestant than the communion office in his Second Book, that it had been definitely objected to by Knox and others as not being sufficiently Protestant. The prayer of oblation which it is said embodies the true doctrine of spiritual sacrifice, makes with the 'holy gifts' the memorial which, it says, Christ willed to be made. In the formula addressed to each communicant, the words which the Scotch Reformer got inserted in the Second Prayer-Book of Edward VI. were left out, and those he regarded as countenancing the old superstition of a material presence were alone retained. The rubric he contended for as necessary to render kneeling even allowable was, as in Elizabeth's Book, left out. The intention of these things, and the tendency of the whole office against Knox's as well as Melville's opinions, and towards what we would now term Anglo-Catholic, or what our fathers termed Popish views, is unmistakeable. The communion table, according to the English Book, might stand in the body of the church, whereas accordthese distractions shall be framed and discussed by a number of grave, wise, and religious divines, which shall be thought fit by the Houses of Parliament; every county electing two for this so great and weighty a business, that so all things being, according to God's true word, scanned and examined by the judicious and religious judgments of those worthy persons, the truth may appear, light and instruction may be given unto authority, and by their power an uniformity of government and worship, agreeable to God's word, may be settled in the Church.' From this it would seem as if it had been intended that the members of the Assembly were rather to be selected by the several counties than merely nominated by their representatives in Parliament; and we know that by this time there were in several of the counties committees

ing to the Scotch Book it was to stand in the chancel or upper part of the church. It was, according to the English Book, to have on it a fair linen cloth; according to the Scotch, 'a carpet, with a linen cloth upon it,' and 'other decent furniture meet for the high mysteries there to be celebrated,' which one can hardly doubt was meant to permit both crosses and candles. According to the Scotch office, as Laud wished it to be, the presbyter was to stand 'before the altar,' that is, with his back to the people, when consecrating the elements; according to the Book as ultimately adjusted, he was to be 'at liberty to stand at such a part of the holy table as he may with more ease and decency use both his hands.' This granted virtually all that ancient and modern Ritualizers of the extremest type desire, though the Scotch bishops shrank from granting it openly and in express terms. In the latter, as in the communion office in the First Prayer-Book of King Edward, the lawfulness of using wafer bread is incidentally asserted, no doubt to leave the way open for its introduction if that should be found practicable. And, finally, while the Second Book of Edward VI. gave no direction what was to be done with the elements that remained after all had communicated, the Scotch did, and required that till the service was over they should be covered with a fair linen cloth or corporal. This last word could not have come there without full intention, for it does not occur in this place in the First Liturgy of King Edward. What did it mean, if no real presence in the High Church sense was implied? Was Laud likely to insert such words without meaning what they naturally suggest? If a Ritualism and semi-Romanism, unknown in Scotland since the Reformation, were not meant to be tolerated, nay, even encouraged, it had ill luck to be so like it. There can be no clearer proof than this office of the truth of King James' saying, that Laud 'did not know the stomach of the Scotch,' and that in his anxiety to gratify a little knot of innovators in Scotland, and to take away from Puritans in England the support the customs of the Scottish Church still afforded them, he provoked a storm which all his efforts and those of his royal master were powerless to allay, and the sad effects of which on British Protestantism are not yet exhausted.

with whom the members of Parliament were wont to consult in other matters of difficulty. The other course, however, was advocated at the time in a very remarkable Latin treatise, and most believe it was in the end adopted.¹ However this may be, no one who remembers that the ordinance embraced the names of Archbishop Ussher, Bishops Prideaux,² Brownrigg, and Westfield, Drs. Featley, Hammond, Holdsworth, Sanderson, Morley, and Downing, as well as those of Drs. Twisse, Temple, Mr. Gataker, and several others who were in favour of a reduced Episcopacy, can doubt that it was fairly enough constituted, and that, had the King only allowed the Royalist divines to attend its meetings, some happier and for England more lasting compromise as to the future constitution of the Church might have been devised. Even in 1647, the King and his advisers do not appear to have thought the Assembly so radically defective that more was needed to ensure such a compromise than the addition of nearly the same number of Royalist divines as had been originally summoned to it.

But Mr. Fairbairn objects to its constitution, and says that nothing but a sectional creed could have been expected to proceed from it. From what he says, one would imagine that the usual practice in preparing creeds which have stood the test of time, had been singularly violated in this case. But is it indeed so? Did the Thirty-nine Articles proceed from such a carefully selected Assembly, or the old Scotch Confession of Faith, or that Confession by which the Scotch bishops tried to supersede it? So far from it, that Cranmer could not have hoped to secure the full assent of a majority of his brethren to his Articles had he submitted them to free discussion. An objection similar in kind was taken by the Remonstrants against the constitution of the Synod of Dort, of which Hales of Eton gives the following pithy account:—‘The second part of their oration was a mere chimera saltans in vacuo—a strange fancy of such a Synod as never was nor can be. I had thought to have taken an abstract of it, but the tediousness of it deterred me. I will give your Honour a taste or two of it. There were but two ways of instituting a Synod for the ending of these quarrels. The first was by seeking out everywhere certain select men who all this time of contention had taken part with neither side, but kept themselves impartial. Secondly, if a Synod of such could not be found (as I think it could scarcely be found in the Netherlands, though the sun itself should seek it), then such a Synod should be framed as in which should be an equal number of both parties each with their several praeses and assessors, and they should debate the matter betwixt themselves; and if they could not agree (as it is likely they would not), what then, thought I? Shall they part as they came? No, forsooth. The civil magistrate—tanquam Deus e machina—he must come in, and prescribe the moderamen, from which neither party must appeal; provided always that he laboured only for accommodation, and not to determine decisively for one part. And so I awake.’¹ If ever on earth an attempt was made to bring together a Synod of men of different judgments in all non-essential matters, it was in the case of that of Westminster.² If the Parliament which summoned it did not bind itself to keep within the limits suggested by the Remonstrants, it in fact observed them. It secured to all liberty of discussion, required that dissents, and the reasons of them, should be reported along with the resolutions of the Assembly, and enacted almost nothing in matters of faith which had not been passed unanimously by the divines. Though few of the Royalist divines attended the meetings, the Minutes of the Assembly show that Dr. Featley did attend regularly for a time, and take a prominent part in the debates on the revision of the English Articles—perhaps as important doctrinal debates as any which appear to have occurred in the Assembly. If Ussher, the greatest of all these divines, was conspicuous by his absence, yet did the Assembly give the most incontrovertible proof of its high regard for him, and its earnest desire to comprehend within the Church those who agreed with him in doctrine, by drawing its statement of several of the most important doctrines mainly from the Articles prepared under his superintendence by the Irish Church. And though the Parliament, on his declining to attend in 1643, appointed another in his place, yet when he came to London in 1647, and was admitted as preacher at Lincoln's Inn, he was again appointed a member of the Assembly.¹

With all admitted defects, then, this was no ordinary Assembly. In one important respect it resembled the celebrated Council of Nicæa itself. Not a few of those who composed it had been honoured to suffer in defence of the truths to which they clung, and many of them had the courage afterwards to brave suffering, insult, and poverty, rather than renounce their creed and their views of church polity and discipline. Nay, they may be said, by the very act of their meeting, to have put their livings, if not their lives, in jeopardy, and so to have given the strongest proof of their deep sense of the necessity of the work to which they then addressed themselves; for the King by proclamation had prohibited their meeting, and had vehemently threatened them with the loss of all their ecclesiastical livings and promotions if they disobeyed his injunctions.

Even the twenty names of special eminence with which Mr. Fairbairn credits the Assembly, would be a larger proportion of the whole than may at first sight appear; for they are the names of men who were regular in their attendance, and form nearly a third of those who were so. But more may fairly be claimed for them and several of their companions than has been conceded. Twisse, the Prolocutor, was a man not only of subtle and speculative genius, but of profound learning, and also one of the most influential theologians of his day, held in honour by all the Reformed Churches. Sir John Savile, who had sought the assistance of Hales for his edition of Chrysostom, was not ashamed to call in the aid of Twisse in preparing for the press Bradwardine's great work, De Causâ Dei adversus Pelagium; and Bishop Hall did not hesitate to say of him that he was 'a man so eminent in school divinity that the Jesuits have felt, and for aught I see shrunk, under his strength.' Yet, with all his eminence, he did not claim, nor, proud as his brethren were of him, did they consent to have inserted in their Confession his peculiar views either as to the order of the divine decrees, or as to the power of God to have pardoned sin without requiring an atonement to be made for it. He had suffered greatly in the war, and though Prolocutor of the Assembly, he died in great straits. Dr. Edward Reynolds was a divine 'eloquent, learned, cautious;' and this may have been the reason why the Assembly devolved on a Committee of which he had charge, the adjusting of that much-maligned sentence in their Confession respecting Reprobation.¹ Calamy was a more liberal and cautious Calvinist still; and no one can read the Minutes of the Assembly's debates on the extent of Redemption, without acknowledging that he was a true disciple of Ussher and Davenant, and feeling thankful that he and Baxter saw fit to hold by their Nonconformist brethren when Reynolds and Wallis abandoned them. Lightfoot, Coleman, and Gataker were all distinguished Oriental scholars; and the last-named was not only a distinguished classical scholar,¹ but also one of the first in Britain to write in defence of the opinion, then much questioned, but now universally received, that the Greek of the New Testament was of a different character from that of the classical authors, and abounded in Hebraisms.² He was the friend of Ussher and Selden, and after them was accounted the most learned man then in England. He was, besides, an eminent and acceptable preacher, and was distinguished by the quaint richness of his style, and the argumentative power of his controversial works. In the Antinomian controversy, on which he brought all his powers to bear, and for his services in which he repeatedly received the thanks of the Assembly,³ Mr. Marsden says that he answered the leaders, as Hooker answered his adversary, 'with the same profound love of truth, the same ponderous and varied learning, the same gentle spirit, . . . and the same devoted adherence to evangelical doctrine, which he showed to be as much opposed to formalism on the one hand, as to these excesses on the other.' Like Twisse, he seemed as anxious to shun preferment as others to obtain it. The age is acknowledged to have been an age of great preachers;⁴ and in the first

⁴ 'The pulpit of the metropolis displayed a galaxy of light and genius such as it had never before, and perhaps has never since, exhibited. Its influence was never greater. The printed sermons of the great Puritan preachers in vast numbers are still extant, and these sufficiently vindicate their reputation. They were no adventurers. They had been brought up in the Church of England; they were entitled to its best preferments; and they might have

In the Conformists' plea for Nonconformists, the power of their preaching is often and gratefully acknowledged. 'I am obliged to acknowledge the efficacy of the Holy Spirit upon the preaching of several of them towards my salvation; and having known the proof and power of Christ speaking in them, I dare not deny them before men, lest I also deny Christ Jesus my Saviour in them. There are several learned, holy, laborious, and successful ministers that were our instructors in our younger time, who have conformed, but not so many as refused to conform, within my knowledge, . . . and in these times all these seemed to be of one mind in the Lord. I and many more rejoiced in their light; and some of them were among preachers as the apple-tree is among the trees of the wood. We sat under their shadow with great delight, and their fruit was pleasant to our taste. I could name the wise master builders that laid the foundation other than which no man can lay; I could name the Paul, and the Apollos, and the Peter, that preached to the heart; the Barnabas and the Boanerges; the friends of the Bridegroom that wooed and besought us, and would not be denied till our souls had received Christ Jesus the Lord. Some of them are at rest in the Lord, and let their names be blessed; and others are in the cloud, and storm, and warfare, and to add bonds to their many afflictions is no small unkindness to religion.'—Third Plea for Nonconformists, p. 34.

'Who maintained Protestant doctrines, preached for conviction, conversion, holiness, and righteousness more than they? Who vindicated all ordinances from some that pretended to live above them? from others that denied the necessity and use of them? and from the profanation of sacred things? And who did more forwardly assist and concur to settle the government upon ancient foundations, and in the inheritor of the Royal throne? Who were more hated by impious sects, and laboured more to convince and reduce them, than they?'—Ib. p. 45.

Such was the effect of their preaching and life on those who witnessed and could appreciate both, and pled for them on other than latitudinarian grounds.

Inn ; and Dr. Thomas Goodwin, eminent as a scholar and divine, and one of the most successful expository preachers of the age. These are not more shadowy to the cultured even yet than Whitaker, White, and Harris, whom Mr. Fairbairn singles out ; and to the humble, pious Puritans of England and Scotland, they, along with Howe, Owen, Ambrose, Baxter, and Bunyan, have ever since furnished their chief spiritual nourishment. Arrowsmith and Tuckney, Professors of Divinity at Cambridge, were not merely clever college tutors, but, as several of their published works clearly indicate, men of high scholarship and considerable mental breadth, and not without influence as preachers. With these University men must be conjoined Dr. Hoyle, the friend of Ussher, and Professor of Divinity, first at Dublin and afterwards at Oxford, who is admitted to have been profound in the faculty of divinity and in patristic learning ; as well as Dr. Wallis, Savilian Professor of Geometry at Oxford, whose attainments as a theologian were only cast into the shade by his greater attainments as a mathematician, and these last are said to have been only inferior to those of Newton himself. He was the friend of Boyle, Gregory, and Newton, the untiring opponent of Hobbes and the Socinians, and one of the authors as well as of the earliest expounders of the Shorter Catechism. His works were republished at the expense of the University of Oxford in 1699, and his manuscripts are said to be still preserved in the public library there, and in the Royal Observatory at Greenwich.

Hallam, therefore, has done the members of the Westminster Assembly nothing more than justice, when he admits that they were 'perhaps equal in learning, good sense, and other merits, to any Lower House of Convocation that ever made a figure in England.'¹ It cannot be denied, moreover, that in two important respects they had the advantage of any Lower House of Convocation which has yet been constituted. There were called in to the aid of the divines some of the laymen of England, distinguished among their fellows in Parliament as statesmen, scholars, or lawyers. Selden himself did not disdain for a time to take an active and not unkindly part in their proceedings; and if, after repeated keen combats with George Gillespie, he chose rather to watch from his place in the House of Commons than to mingle actively in the debates, there were others who followed a different course. One well-known member of the House of Commons, Francis Rouse, not only took an intelligent interest in the debates, but put his special gifts at the service of the Assembly. In accordance with suggestions made by its members, he revised his metrical version of the Psalms, which, after some further changes made in the North, was to be for so long the book of praise for the churches in Scotland. Then, when under the Solemn League and Covenant the original purpose of the Assembly was extended, there were associated with these English divines and laymen the very élite of the Scottish ministers and elders,—Henderson, whose learning and culture even Royalists admit; Rutherford, twice invited to a professorship in Holland; Gillespie, the prince of disputants, who ‘with the fire of youth had the wisdom of ages;’ and Baillie, who has embalmed in graphic narrative their debates and gossip; together with Johnstone of Warriston, and the great Marquis of Argyle, who both suffered afterwards on account of their principles; Loudon, the Chancellor of the kingdom, and the engaging but versatile Lord Maitland.

No doubt Clarendon has spoken of the members of the Assembly with great contempt, and Milton in terms of lofty scorn.¹ But it was only after their difference on the question of divorce that Milton expressed himself so bitterly respecting them, and on that question at least

¹ The anonymous satirists of the day, of course, followed the example of the great poet, and aimed their keenest shafts at the obnoxious Assembly. Several specimens of bitter satire may be found in the Catalogue of Prints and Drawings in the British Museum, Division I, vol. i. published in 1870. The following comparatively mild specimen is copied from one of the volumes of the King's Pamphlets:

‘Pretty Synod does it sit,
Voyd of grace as well of wyt—
And make no canons.

But such as Ordinance are called,
Which have the very souls enthralled

they have carried with them the judgment of succeeding times. Clarendon's account, again, did not see the light till after he had got their aid for the restoration of his master and his friends, had failed to make good the promise of 'ease to tender consciences' that he had given, and had striven in vain both by kindness and threats, both by promotion offered and punishment inflicted, to bend them to his purposes. He who has dealt such scrimp justice to others, who did not belong to his own exclusive circle, could hardly be expected to give any other than a partial and prejudiced judgment of the leaders of a party which he had treated unfairly, and which, when all other constitutional means proved ineffectual, continued by passive resistance and patient endurance to bear testimony against his policy, and meekly to plead for the indulgence it had done so much to merit.

Even so decided an Episcopalian as Bishop Hall did not disdain, under an assumed name, to address a respectful letter to his 'learned and reverend brethren'¹ of the Assembly. Some, more moderate than he, took a deep interest in its proceedings, and also lauded its Confession of Faith. The Independents, moreover, and the Baptists, too, bore most emphatic testimony to its value. The former in 1658 approved the Confession substantially in the form in which it passed the English Houses of Parliament, and said that they and their brethren in New England 'fully assent' to the substance of it.¹ The latter in 1688 followed a similar course, 'the more abundantly to manifest their consent,' both with the Assembly and those of the Congregational way, 'in all the fundamental articles of the Christian religion.'²

Considerable weight is also due to the admissions frankly made by the five Dissenting Brethren and the Scotch Commissioners. If the former had not had a high regard for the character and attainments of those with whom they were associated in the Assembly, and a hopeful expectation of 'a happy latitude and agreement' by their means, they would, as themselves tell us, 'have declined this theatre, of all others the most judicious and severe,—an Assembly of so many able, learned, and grave divines, where much of the piety, wisdom, and learning of two kingdoms are met in one, honoured and assisted with the presence of the worthies of both Houses.'³ If the latter, again, had not held their English associates in high esteem, they would neither have spoken of them nor acted towards them as they did, nor have cherished such a warm affection for them in after years.

Finally, the opinion of Baxter, who more than almost any other clergyman then living was competent to form a calm and unprejudiced judgment of the matter, is unequivocally favourable. His words, though often quoted, may be here repeated: 'The divines there congregate were men of eminent learning and godliness, and ministerial abilities and fidelity; and being not worthy to be one of them myself, I may the more freely speak that truth which I know, even in the face of malice and envy, that, as far as I am able to judge by the information of all history of that kind, and by any other evidences left us, the Christian world, since the days of the apostles, had never a Synod of more excellent divines (taking one thing with another) than this Synod and the Synod of Dort were.’¹ ‘This,’ as Dr. Stoughton well observes, ‘is high praise ; but it comes nearer the truth than the condemnatory verdicts pronounced by some others. . . . The Westminster divines had learning—scriptural, patristic, scholastical, and modern—enough and to spare ; all solid, substantial, and ready for use. . . . Moreover,’ he adds, ‘in the perception and advocacy of what is most characteristic and fundamental in the gospel of Jesus Christ, they were as a body considerably in advance of some who could put in a claim to equal and perhaps higher scholarship.’²

But it is said that, however good those who attended the Westminster Assembly may have been, there were men better fitted to frame a Confession for British Protestants who were not invited, or at least were not present there. After what I have already stated regarding Ussher, I should hope that no more needs to be said about his absence. There was no theologian for whom the English Puritans had a higher regard than for him ; and had the King only allowed him to gratify the wishes of the Parliament by attending the Assembly, perhaps his scheme for a union of Episcopacy and Presbytery would have met with only less favour at its hands than his system of doctrine did. Perhaps the difficulties of his master himself would have been greatly lessened, and many of the succeeding troubles have been avoided. Whether the others Mr. Fairbairn singles out are really to be deemed better fitted to frame a Confession and Form of Government for the Church than those summoned to do so, would depend very much on the character the Confession was to assume, and in regard to that there was pretty general agreement among moderate Episcopalians and Puritans. If the doctrine taught by Anselm, Bradwardine, Wycliffe, Tyndall, Ussher, Whitgift, and Abbot, and more moderately by a host of others in England, was not then to be pronounced false at the foundation, or to be ignored ; if the Church, which up to the time of Laud had been in doctrinal harmony with the Reformed Church abroad, was not to be revolutionized, then the Assembly may not have suffered so much as he supposes from the absence of the men he names. If credence is to be given to Baillie, that 'pleasantest of letter gossips,' there was in the Assembly no lack of men of sharpness, quickness, and subtlety of wit, nor, while Twisse, Lightfoot, Coleman, Gataker, Gillespie, and Rutherford were there, was there lack of others who were walking libraries. We do not read that the quiet recluse of Eton was called to any of the Convocations held by his patron Laud; and even after he bade good-night to John Calvin, there is, as has been said, no evidence that he ever said good-morning to Arminius. It is known that, on the important point of the right of the Church to require the observance of things in their own nature indifferent, his judgment remained with the Assembly rather than with its opponents.¹ He suffered for a time, I admit with sorrow, from the Parliamentary troops, though not more than Dr. Twisse and others did at the hands of the Royalists. But it has yet to be clearly made out whether it was then that he was finally deprived of preferment, or whether, after the first excitement of the war was over, he, like many others, was allowed to enjoy his fellowship in peace till after the execution of the King, and then, along with not a few loyal Presbyterians, was dispossessed for not taking the oath of fidelity to the new régime. At least I have failed to find his name in the Journals of the Houses among the fellows who were deprived in 1644-5,

¹ Prayer, confession, thanksgiving, reading of the Scriptures, and administration of the sacraments in the plainest and simplest manner, were matter enough to furnish out a sufficient liturgy, though nothing either of private opinion or of church pomp—of garments or prescribed gestures, of imagery, of music, of matter concerning the dead, of many superfluities which creep into the church under the name of order and decency—did interpose itself. To charge churches and liturgies with things unnecessary was the first beginning of all superstition; and when scruple of conscience began to be made or pretended, there schism began to break in. If the special guides and fathers of the Church would be a little sparing of encumbering churches with superfluities, or not over-rigid either in reviving obsolete customs or imposing new, there would be far less cause of schism or superstition; and all the inconvenience were likely to ensue would be this: they should in so doing yield a little to the imbecility of their inferiors,—a thing which St. Paul would never have refused to do. Meanwhile, wheresoever false or suspected opinions are made a piece of a

and that of Penwarden, who was his successor, among those appointed; and Chalmers says expressly that it was for refusing the engagement he was finally deprived.¹

Complaint is made of the absence of Chillingworth from the Assembly. But he was even a keener Royalist than Hales, and had been a member of the notorious Convocation of 1640, in which the innovations of Laud were sanctioned, and severe penalties decreed against Puritans of every grade. I can find no evidence that he there attempted to give practical effect to his principles, or that he dissented from or actively opposed the extreme measures then resolved on. From the circumstances of his life, it is not to be wondered at that he should have been left out, or that his works did not immediately command the reverence and esteem that has been accorded to them in succeeding times. But it is altogether a mistake to represent the Westminster Assembly as in any sense responsible for the follies of Cheynell, his erratic antagonist. Chillingworth is at least once referred to in its debates, and on that occasion his views in regard to 'fundamentals' are mentioned² in such a way as to show that he was held in respect by members of Assembly more influential than Cheynell. Neither was Ralph Cudworth in the Assembly; but both he and Whichcott were held in high esteem by its members, and in 1645 both were approved by the Assembly³ as worthy of the appointments in the University of Cambridge, to which they had been designated by the Earl of Manchester. It is acknowledged, I think, church liturgy, he that separates is not the schismatic; for it is alike unlawful to make profession of known or suspected falsehood, as to put in practice unlawful or suspect actions.—Tract concerning Schism, p. 45. Hales's authority was pleaded, and this passage specially referred to, in the papers prepared by the Puritans in connection with the Savoy Conference. There is much in his sermons on John xiv. 27 and 1 Tim. iv. 8 to incline one to the opinion, that on other points his sympathies were rather with Martinius of Bremen than with Episcopius, as Chalmers had inferred from his letters.

by one whose authority Mr. Fairbairn will not call in question, that at that time they were both moderate Calvinists. In Cudworth's noble discourse before the House of Commons, to which he has definitely referred, I can see nothing really inconsistent with this view, and there are some passages in it which he and his friends would do well to note.¹ Bryan Walton also was absent, and at the time the Assembly met he was known chiefly as one skilled in the law of tithes. But there were other scholars there no way inferior to him in any learning needed for the formation of a Confession of Faith, and safer guides as to the comparative trustworthiness of the Hebrew original and the Septuagint version of the Old Testament than he ultimately became. It is quite possible that, though a great scholar, Walton may, in his youth, and while absorbed in the study of tithe-law, have been but indifferently attentive to the ordinary duties of a parish

¹ 'The great mystery of the gospel, it doth not lie only in Christ without us (though we must know also what he hath done for us), but the very pith and kernel of it consists in Christ inwardly formed in our hearts. . . . We can receive no virtue from it till it be inwardly digested and concocted into our souls; till it be made ours, and become a living thing in our hearts. . . . Christ, indeed, hath made an expiation for our sins upon his cross, and the blood of Christ is the only sovereign balsam to free us from the guilt of them; but yet, besides the sprinkling of the blood of Christ upon us, we must be made partakers also of his Spirit. Christ came into the world as well to redeem us from the power and bondage of our sins, as to free us from the guilt of them. . . . The end of the gospel is life and perfection,—'tis a divine nature—'tis to make us partakers of the image of God in righteousness and true holiness, without which salvation itself were but a notion. Christ came, indeed, into the world to make an expiation and atonement for our sins, but the end of this was that we might eschew sin, that we might forsake all ungodliness and worldly lusts. The gospel declares pardon of sin to those that are heavy laden with it, and willing to be disburdened, to this end, that it might quicken us to new obedience; whereas otherwise the guilt of sin might have detained us in horror and despair, and so have kept us still more strongly under the power of it, in sad and dismal apprehensions of God's wrath provoked against us, and inevitably falling on us.'—Sermon before House of Commons, p. 42. He does not seem to me to give up the doctrine of predestination any more than that of the atonement. The differences between him and his most pronounced Puritan colleagues were small in amount compared with the differences between him and later latitudinarians. When the school which is so eager to claim him shall accept this noble sermon as a summary of the things most surely believed by it, Puritans and Broad Churchmen may be content to forget their differences.

minister, or that he may have been so actively hostile to the Parliament, that their committee, on this ground alone, may have deemed themselves warranted to mete out far harder measure to him than calmer times will approve. At any rate, those who deem it necessary to bring up this should not have forgotten to mention what Cromwell and his Puritan brother-in-law Wilkins did to help forward the publication of Walton's great work; nor what that 'pleasantest of letter gossips,' Baillie, has said of him in a work which perhaps only a Dr. Dryasdust may be supposed now to have the patience to master, though no one who aspires to write with accuracy on the men of that time, and to guide opinion in regard to their character and work, has a right jauntily to dispose of it and many others of the same class with a sneer or a sarcasm. 'Brianus Waltonus,' says Baillie, after referring to some other advocates of the superior claims of the Septuagint chronology, 'Prolegomenorum suorum nono in fine, etsi multo modestius, acriter tamen satis, et quam potest serio, eâdem oberrat chordâ, quod mihi permolestum accidit. Nam Waltonus, ob insignem et laudatissimam suam operam in nobilissimorum polyglottorum Bibliorum, Londini, editionem valde faveo, doleoque serio virum tanti in omnes Ecclesias meriti, istius Novaturientium sectæ laqueis ullatenus irretitum.'¹ Is there not more charity and kindness shown here to Walton, than some of Walton's friends seem yet prepared to concede to Baillie and his Puritan colleagues?

But, after all that may be said on such points, it is mainly by their work that the Westminster Assembly must submit to be judged. If it really be the case that that is of so extreme a kind as Mr. Fairbairn and others assert, and that it is intentionally so, no argument from the general character and attainments of its members will avail in arrest of the judgment he pleads for against them; while, if it be not the case that their work is of such a kind, it would matter but little though their general character and attainments were less clearly established. Is, then, the view he takes of the Assembly borne out by its Minutes or its symbolical books, or by the private writings of the more prominent of its members? So far from it, that, on the contrary, it may be clearly shown that hardly any Synod since the first Council of Nicea has taken more care that all its decisions in matters of faith, deemed worthy of a place in its Confession, should be practically unanimous, and all its regulations in matters of polity should admit of very considerable latitude and variation in points of detail. With respect to matters of discipline and government, the Assembly strove earnestly to secure an accommodation wherever serious differences of opinion emerged among its members;¹ and if it sometimes failed in its efforts, the blame rests quite as much with the Parliament as with it. Gillespie, in his speech to the Assembly, before going down to Scotland in 1644, expressly advocated this course.² The Assembly followed it, with

² See p. 28 of these Minutes. He hoped that common opposition to Erastianism would draw together many who differed on subordinate points of Church government, and was willing to make as well as ask concessions for the sake of union. In his controversy with Coleman, he said: 'We will never despair of an union with such as are sound in the faith, holy in life, and willing to a Church-refining and sin-censuring government in the hands of Church officers' (Nihil Respondes, p. 11); and in a sermon before the House of Lords he expresses himself still more earnestly: 'When I speak against liberty of conscience, it is far from my meaning to advise any rigorous or violent course against such as, being sound in the faith, holy in life, and not of a turbulent or factious carriage, do differ in smaller matters from the common rule. "Let that day be darkness; let not God regard it from above, neither let the light shine upon it," in which it shall be said that the children of God in Britain are enemies and persecutors of each other. He is no good Christian the full approval of the Scotch Commissioners, in its resolutions with regard to the office and duties of elders, and strove hard to carry it out in the important matter of Church censures,¹ so as to allow the Independents, as one has said, 'to have their chapels apart, if they would only consent to enter them by the door of the great national cathedral.' Nay, even in regard to Presbytery itself, they were content to determine that it was lawful and warrantable rather than that it was absolutely imperative. A similar course was followed, only still more decidedly, in their Directory for Public Worship,—many of its regulations being recommendations rather than injunctions, and that on the express ground lest they should impose a burden on weak consciences, or, as Gillespie on one occasion expressed it, should 'cross the principles of the good old Nonconformists.'² Did they act in a different spirit in framing their Confession of Faith? I think we are now in a position to pronounce that they did not.

Some time ago, I endeavoured to show that the Assembly's Confession was not derived from foreign sources, either Genevan or Dutch, but that, both in its general plan and in the tenor of its more important articles, it was drawn from native sources other than Scotch, and in who will not say Amen to the prayer of Jesus Christ, that all who are his may be one in him. If this be heartily wished, let it be effectually endeavoured; and let those who will choose a dividing way rather than a uniting way bear the blame.'

¹ In the last paper given in by them to the Sub-committee on Accommodation, in answer to the proposals of the majority, that they should stately join in the ordinary worship of the parochial congregations where they lived, and be under the congregational eldership, but should not be obliged to receive the Lord's Supper there, nor to be subject to the censures of Classes or Synods, they reply that this supposes what is contrary to their professed judgment, viz. that they should be members and pastors of parishes as then constituted; but as the Houses had not thought meet as yet to give power by a law to purge the congregations, and as the rule for purging proposed by the Assembly was not only short, but exclusive of what they thought was required in Church members, the object they had in view was not how the parishes should be reformed, so far as would satisfy their consciences, but how they might be considered for forbearance apart.

particular from those confessedly Augustinian or Calvinistic Articles,¹ which, even before the Synod of Dort was summoned, or the Arminian controversy had become so embittered, had been adopted by the Convocation of the Irish Church. An examination of the Minutes of the

Perhaps it may be said that this resemblance is nothing more than might be expected from the common system on which both of these, and in fact most of the Reformed Confessions of the previous century were framed. But if the order of the chapters of those other Confessions be compared with these two, it will be at once perceived that the resemblance between the Articles of the Church of Ireland and the Westminster Confession is something more and closer than can be thus explained. For instance, all the other Confessions, with the exception of the Swiss, place the chapter on God before that on Holy Scripture; all which have a chapter on Predestination or God's Eternal Decree, place that chapter not before those on creation and providence, but after those on the fall of man and original sin, or later in order still. Most give the chapters relating to the Church and the Magistrate in an order different from that which is followed by the Irish and the Westminster Confessions. Further, the headings of the chapters are too closely alike in language to allow us to suppose the later could have been drawn up without reference to the earlier. Thus we find in both, 'of Holy Scripture,' and 'of God's Eternal Decree,' when in each case the plural nouns might have been used, as they are in our Catechisms; we have the same qualifying adjectives employed in both, in these and in other headings, and we have the same descriptive epithets used even when others are preferred in the English Articles. Finally, the statements of the two Formularies in several of the more important doctrines of our faith, have only to be placed in juxtaposition to show that the resemblance between the two is very close and striking in language as well as in general arrangement.

¹ On various occasions (pp. 126, 127, etc.) discussions arise about words not found in the Confession as finally adopted, but found in the Irish Articles. On the Irish Synod had left open. But I do say that these points are not many nor important, and that it is clear the Assembly took the greatest possible pains to express its views in such a way as to obviate objections which had been or might have been taken either to the words or to the matter of the Irish Articles. I endeavoured once already to show how carefully balanced the statements of the Confession were.¹ Let me, now that I have access to the Minutes of the Assembly, attempt this again.

I. The Scriptures.—The Westminster divines, like the Irish, place this Article at the head of their Confession. This, and not the doctrine of the Decree, is the point from which their whole system is sought to be evolved, although that doctrine is placed by them, as it had been by the Irish divines, in its logical rather than in its natural order. If any chapter in the Confession was more carefully framed than another, it was this, ‘of the Holy Scripture.’ It formed the subject of repeated and earnest debate in the House of Commons as well as in the Assembly; and I think it requires only to be fairly examined to make it appear that its framers were so far from desiring to go beyond their predecessors in rigour, that they were at more special pains than the authors of any other Confession—1. To avoid mixing up the question of the canonicity of particular books with the question of their authorship, where any doubt at all existed on the latter point;² 2. To leave open all reasonable questions as to the mode and degree of one occasion a paragraph is at first adopted in the very words in which it is found in the Irish Articles; but when it comes to be fitted into its place in the chapter to which it belongs, several changes have to be made on it (p. 278). And when the Confession is completed, a proposal is made for a Committee to consider of errors not obviated by the Confessions of England, Scotland, and Ireland, which it might be expedient to refer to in the new one (p. 286).

² Any one who will take the trouble to compare their list of the canonical books with that given in the Belgian Confession or in the Irish Articles, may satisfy himself that they held, with Dr. Jamieson, that the authority of these books ‘does not depend on the fact whether this prophet or that wrote a particular book or parts of a book; whether a certain portion was derived from the Elohist or the Jehovist; whether Moses wrote the close of Deutero-

WESTMINSTER CONFESSION.

Under the name of Holy Scripture, or the word of God written, are now contained all the books of the Old and New Testament, which are these:—

Of the Old Testament.

Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, Deuteronomy, Joshua, Judges, Ruth, 1 Samuel, 2 Samuel, 1 Kings, 2 Kings, 1 Chronicles, 2 Chronicles, Ezra, Nehemiah, Esther, Job, Psalms, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, the Song of Songs, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Lamentations, Ezekiel, Daniel, Hosea, Joel, Amos, Obadiah, Jonah, Micah, Nahum, Habakkuk, Zephaniah, Haggai, Zechariah, Malachi.

Of the New Testament.

The Gospels according to Matthew, Mark, Luke, John; the Acts of the Apostles; Paul's Epistles to the Romans, Corinthians 1, Corinthians 2, Galatians, Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, Thessalonians 1, Thessalonians 2, to Timothy 1, to Timothy 2, to Titus, to Philemon; the Epistle to the Hebrews, the Epistle of James, the first and second Epistles of Peter; the first, second, and third Epistles of John, the Epistle of Jude, the Revelation.

¹ Not even the text they adduce in proof of this statement will suffice to fix down its meaning to the sense which Lee and others have sought to impose on it; for Lightfoot, who in matters critical was regarded as one of their highest authorities, has expressly stated that the words one iota or one tittle are by our Lord himself used interchangeably with 'one of the least of that the sense of Scripture in any particular place is not manifold, but one, and so raise an earnest protest against that system of spiritualizing the text which had been too much countenanced by some of the most eminent of the Fathers, and many of the best of the mystics.

II. Of the Trinity, and of Christ the Mediator.—I can only repeat what I have already said as to the care and caution the Westminster Divines have shown in these chapters. Where shall we turn for a more full and scriptural exhibition of the attributes of God? where for a more sober yet definite statement of the doctrines of the Trinity, of the hypostatical union of the divine and human natures¹ in our ‘Mediator and Surety,’ or of the nature and efficacy of his redemptive work? While the doctrine of the Trinity is clearly asserted, the so-called Athanasian Creed is shrunk up into the single sentence: ‘The Father is of none, neither begotten nor proceeding; the Son is eternally begotten of the Father; the Holy Ghost eternally proceeding from the Father and the Son.’ Some rash speculations respecting the mode of the Sonship, which the Irish divines were blamed for inserting, were passed over by the Westminster divines. In revising the English Articles on the subject of this chapter, they first changed the eighth into the following form: ‘The creeds that go under the name of the Nice Creed, Athanasian Creed, and that which is commonly called the Apostles’ Creed, are thoroughly to be received and believed, for that the matter of them may be proved by most certain warrants of Holy Scripture.’² these commandments;’ and that his meaning in both cases is not that no letter or part of a letter should be lost or corrupted, but that not a particle of the divine meaning should be so—‘eousque incorruptam immortalitatem ac puritatem textûs sacri asserere ut non peritura sit ulla sensûs sacri particula a capite legis ad calcem.’ To the same effect Vines says that ‘the Scripture stands not in cortice verborum, but in medulla sensus;’ and shows that he not only knew of variæ lectiones in the Hebrew, but held that some in the margin were ‘truer’ than those in the text. Tuckney expresses himself in similar terms, and so does Ussher in his famous letter to Cappellus.

² Lightfoot’s Journal of the Proceedings of the Assembly, p. 10. The form into which they ultimately cast this article will be found in the Appendix.

And then they had 'long agitation about setting some gloss upon the preface and conclusion of Athanasius' Creed, which seems to be something harsh.' Have the Reformers in the English Church at the present day as yet got farther than these divines were willing to go? Have they even yet succeeded in fixing definitely the sense in which the minatory clauses are to be interpreted? The more rigid Calvinists have been blamed for attempting to define with a minuteness, as novel as uncalled for, that in which the atonement of our blessed Lord consisted; while those of another school, in opposing their extravagances, have explained away what is said in Scripture of his mysterious agony and sorrow of soul, of his vicarious sacrifice and death. The Westminster divines, with rare judiciousness, avoid both extremes, following closely the language of the Irish Articles, save that they omit the expression, 'to reconcile his Father unto us,' retained in them and in the English Articles. For the reasons given by Archbishop Magee and Principal Hill, I myself am satisfied this expression is warrantable; but I admit it is scrupled at by some of whose orthodoxy I cannot entertain a doubt.

III. Of God's Eternal Decree.—This chapter, as will be seen from the note below, is taken almost entirely from the Irish Articles.¹ The only additions worth naming are

IRISH ARTICLES.

CHAPTER III.—OF GOD'S ETERNAL DECREE.

ARTICLE III.—OF GOD'S ETERNAL DECREE AND PREDESTINATION.

I. God from all eternity did, by the most wise and holy counsel of his own will, freely and unchangeably ordain whatsoever comes to pass: yet so, as thereby neither is God the author of sin, nor is violence offered to the will of the creatures, nor is the liberty or contingency of second causes taken away, but rather established.

II. God from all eternity did, by his unchangeable counsel, ordain whatsoever in time should come to pass: yet so as thereby no violence is offered to the wills of the reasonable creatures, and neither the liberty nor the contingency of the second causes is taken away, but established rather.

II. Although God knows whatsoever may or can come to pass upon all supposed conditions; yet hath he not decreed anything because he foresaw it as future, or as that which would come to pass upon such conditions.

Section II., which pronounces against the scientia media of the Jesuits, and the slight enlargement of the statement on Reprobation in Section VII. The latter is quite

III. By the decree of God, for the manifestation of his glory, some men and angels are predestinated unto everlasting life, and others fore-ordained to everlasting death.

IV. These angels and men, thus predestinated and fore-ordained, are particularly and unchangeably designed; and their number is so certain and definite, that it cannot be either increased or diminished.

V. Those of mankind that are predestinated unto life, God, before the foundation of the world was laid, according to his eternal and immutable purpose, and the secret counsel and good pleasure of his will, hath chosen in Christ unto everlasting glory, out of his mere free grace and love, without any foresight of faith or good works, or perseverance in either of them, or any other thing in the creature, as conditions, or causes moving him thereunto; and all to the praise of his glorious grace.

VI. As God hath appointed the elect unto glory, so hath he, by the eternal and most free purpose of his will, fore-ordained all the means thereunto. Wherefore they who are elected being fallen in Adam, are redeemed by Christ; are effectually called to faith in Christ by his Spirit working in due season; are justified, adopted, sanctified, and kept by his power through faith unto salvation. Neither are any other redeemed by Christ, effectually called, justified, adopted, sanctified, and saved, but the elect only.

12. By the same eternal counsel, God hath predestinated some unto life, and reprobated some unto death: of both which there is a certain number known only to God, which can neither be increased nor diminished.

13. Predestination to life is the everlasting purpose of God, whereby, before the foundations of the world were laid, he hath constantly decreed in his secret counsel to deliver from curse and damnation those whom he hath chosen in Christ out of mankind, and to bring them by Christ unto everlasting salvation, as vessels made to honour.

14. The cause moving God to predestinate unto life, is not the foreseeing of faith, or perseverance or good works, or of anything which is in the person predestinated, but only the good pleasure of God himself. For all things being ordained for the manifestation of his glory, and his glory being to appear both in the works of his mercy and of his justice; it seemed good to his heavenly wisdom to choose out a certain number towards whom he would extend his undeserved mercy, leaving the rest to be spectacles of his justice.

15. Such as are predestinated unto life, be called according unto God's purpose (his Spirit working in due season), and through grace they obey the calling, they be justified freely, they be made sons of God by adoption, they be made like the image of his only begotten Son Jesus Christ, they walk religiously in good works, and at length, by God's mercy, they attain to everlasting felicity.

32. None can come unto Christ unless it be given unto him, and unless the Father draw him. And all men are not so drawn by the Father that they may as guarded as the language used by Ussher in his Method of the Christian Religion;¹ and, as I have already stated, it was drawn up by a committee of which the cautious Reynolds had charge. The former was the least that could be expected in a Synod over which Dr. Twisse presided. But it is remarkable that, though the Assembly met after the Synod of Dort, and had for its president one whose opinions on these mysterious subjects were almost as pronounced as those of Gomarus himself, it fell back not on the decrees of that Synod, but on the Articles of the Irish Church, which had been drawn up before the Synod of Dort was summoned, or the controversies its decrees occasioned had waxed so fierce. The debates of the Assembly clearly show that its members did not wish to determine several particulars decided by the Synod of Dort, far less to determine them

VII. The rest of mankind, God was pleased, according to the unsearchable counsel of his own will, whereby he extendeth or withholdeth mercy as he pleaseth, for the glory of his sovereign power over his creatures, to pass by, and to ordain them to dishonour and wrath for their sin, to the praise of his glorious justice.

VIII. The doctrine of this high mystery of predestination is to be handled with special prudence and care, that men attending to the will of God revealed in his Word, and yielding obedience thereunto, may, from the certainty of their effectual vocation, be assured of their eternal election. So shall this doctrine afford matter of praise, reverence, and admiration of God, and of humility, diligence, and abundant consolation to all that sincerely obey the gospel.

come unto the Son. Neither is there such a sufficient measure of grace vouchsafed unto every man whereby he is enabled to come unto everlasting life.

But such as are not predestinated to salvation shall finally be condemned for their sins.

17. We must receive God's promises in such wise as they be generally set forth unto us in Holy Scripture; and in our doings, that will of God is to be followed, which we have expressly declared unto us in the Word of God.

¹ This work, published by him in his youth, but revised and republished a year or two before his death, contains the following question and answer: 'Q. Did God then, before he made man, determine to save some and reject others?—A. Yes, surely,—before they had done either good or evil, God in his eternal counsel set some apart upon whom he would in time show the riches of his mercy, and determined to withhold the same from others, upon whom he would show the severity of his justice.'—See it in his Works, as edited by Elrington, vol. xi.

more rigidly than it had done. They even intentionally left open one point which the Irish divines thought fit to determine. They spoke indifferently of the 'decree' and of the 'decrees' of God, while the Irish divines speak of only one and 'the same decree;' and from the notes of their debates given below,¹ it will be seen that this was done because all were not agreed upon the point, and in order that every one might enjoy his own sense! The same care was taken to avoid the insertion of anything which could be regarded as indicating a preference for supralapsarianism;² and for this purpose, the words, 'to bring this to pass, God ordained to permit man to fall,' were changed into 'they who are elected, being fallen in Adam, are redeemed by Christ,' etc. Did these divines mean to follow an opposite policy in regard to the point on which Calamy, Arrowsmith, Vines, Seaman, and other disciples of Davenant, or according to Baillie of Amyraut, differed from the more exact Calvinists? After repeated perusal of their debates, I cannot take upon myself certainly to affirm that they did, though I admit that this matter is not so clear as the others above referred to. No notes of the debate in its latest stage are given, nor is any vote or dissent respecting it found in these Minutes. Calamy, who spoke repeatedly in the debate on the Extent of Redemption, avowed that he held, in the same sense as the English divines at the Synod of Dort,³ 'that Christ by his death did pay a price for all, with absolute inten-

¹ 'Mr. Rutherford—All agree in this, that God decrees the end and means, but whether in one or more decrees is not agreed. Say, "God also hath decreed." It is very probably but one decree, but whether fit to express it in a Confession of Faith . . .

'Mr. Gillespie—When that word is left out, is it not a truth? and so every one may enjoy his own sense.

'Mr. Reynolds—Let us not put in disputes and scholastical things into a Confession of Faith. I think they are different decrees in our manner of conception.

'Mr. Calamy—That it may be a truth, I think, in our Prolocutor's book, he gives a great deal of reason for it; but why should we put it in a Confession of Faith?—Notes of Speeches in Minutes—see pp. 150, 151.

tion for the elect, with conditional intention for the reprobate in case they do believe; that all men should be salvabiles non obstante lapsu Adami . . .; that Jesus Christ did not only die sufficiently for all, but God did intend, in giving of Christ, and Christ in giving himself did intend, to put all men in a state of salvation in case they do believe.' Seaman, Vines, Marshall, and Harris in part at least, agreed with him.¹ And though I cannot find that Dr. Arrowsmith took part in this debate, yet he was attending the Assembly, was a member of the Committee on the Confession, and in his writings has repeatedly expressed his leaning towards the same opinion.² In the progress of the debate, the proposition that Christ redeemed the elect only, was exchanged for this other, that Christ did intend to redeem the elect only. The final decision of the Assembly, as has just been stated, is not inserted in these Minutes; and though at first sight it may not seem easy to reconcile the opinions of these divines with the language of the sixth section of this chapter of the Confession, it would be rash for me to say it is impossible. They certainly did not succeed in getting any positive

In his sermon on Rev. xii. 1, 2, making a comparison between the natural sun and Christ the Sun of righteousness, he thus expresses himself: 'No visible creature but shares more or less in the benefit of this influence. So approbation of their opinions inserted; but it is just possible that the language of this section may have been so arranged, that they felt warranted in accepting it as not positively condemning them. Those who in modern times have pronounced most confidently that the more restricted view is exclusively intended, seem to me to have unconsciously construed or interpreted the words, 'neither are any other redeemed by Christ, effectually called, justified, adopted, sanctified, and saved, but the elect only,' as if they had run, 'neither are any other redeemed by Christ, or effectually called, or justified, adopted, sanctified, and saved, but the elect only.' But these two statements do not necessarily bear the same meaning. Calamy, Arrowsmith, and the others who agreed with them, may have felt justified in accepting the former, though they might have scrupled to accept the latter.¹

It may be argued, however (and it is better to advert to it here), that even if the opinions of these divines were not positively excluded by the language of this section, they

Christ, being the light that lighteth every one that cometh into the world, there is no man but partakes of his goodness in one kind or other, though with much variety in the success.'

In his Chain of Principles (p. 182), Arrowsmith, like Calamy, interprets John iii. 16 not of the 'elect world,' but of 'the undeserving, yea ill-deserving world of mankind.' Gataker, in his book, de Stylo Novi Testamenti (p. 56), adopts a similar interpretation of this passage. Of course Caryl, Burroughs, and Strong, the members who recommended the Marrow of Modern Divinity, may fairly be held as concurring in this interpretation, though, like several who did so in the succeeding century, they may not have accepted the detailed theory which the author of that book has built on it. Calvin himself has been held by Overall, Hall, and others, to have countenanced the same interpretation, when he says, in his commentary on the passage, 'Universalem notam apposuit, tum ut promiscue omnes ad vitæ participationem invitet, tum ut præcidat excusationem incredulis. Eodem etiam pertinet nomen mundi quo prius usus est. Tametsi, enim, in mundo nihil reperietur Dei favore dignum, se tamen toti mundo propitium ostendit, quum sine exceptione omnes ad fidem Christi vocat, quæ nihil aliud est quam ingressus in vitam. Cæterum meminerimus ita communiter promitti omnibus vitam in Christo, qui crediderint, ut tamen minime communis omnium sit fides. Patet enim omnibus Christus ac expositus est, solis tamen electis oculos Deus aperit.'

¹ This concatenation may be what Gillespie points at in his speech, p. 153, when he says they must look beyond the proposition, and see what they held concerning that which in order goes before and what in order follows after. He himself did not accept even their view of John iii. 16.

must be held to be so by that used in chap. viii. sec. 8: 'To all those for whom Christ hath purchased redemption he doth certainly and effectually communicate and apply the same.' It is quite possible that, in the progress of the debate, they may have yielded somewhat, especially after having secured, in chap. vii. sec. 3, words sufficient to guard the truth they were mainly anxious to conserve,—that under the covenant of grace, and by the preaching of the gospel, the Lord 'freely offereth unto sinners life and salvation by Jesus Christ, requiring of them faith in him that they may be saved.' Besides, they had admitted (p. 159) a distinction between the propositum morientis and the meritum mortis. Still, it is also just possible that they may have accepted the words 'purchased redemption,' in the eighth chapter, as Baxter was willing to do, not of every fruit of Christ's death, but of 'that special redemption proper to the elect,' 'which was accompanied with an intention of actual application of the saving benefits in time.' Ussher and some of his immediate disciples, of whose own position there seems to be little doubt, appear occasionally to have used the phrase in the same sense,¹ and speak of the differences between Spanheim and Amyraut, the representatives of the two continental Calvinistic schools, as παρεργα quædam, which should not alienate those who in common rejected Pelagianism and semi-Pelagianism.² Dr. Ames, again, who himself belonged to the stricter school, and who may be regarded as in fact one of the English Puritans, maintains that the ¹ This may be seen in his letter on the intent and extent of the death of Christ, and in his vindication of that letter (Works, vol. xii.). In the former he dwells chiefly on the point on which he and Davenant differed from the older school; but in the latter he gives greater prominence to the point in which he differed from the Arminians, and says that impetration, in the sense these attached to the term, was not of wider extent than application, and that 'forgiveness of sins is not impetrated for any unto whom the merit of Christ's death is not applied.' Some suppose that Ussher's views changed a good deal in his later days; but if Baxter's, or even Hammond's, account of interviews with him shortly before his death are carefully compared with this letter, and the vindication of it, his later opinions will be found to be as nearly as possible identical with his earlier. To the last he denied that Christ died for all men ἐξ ἁσού. For his latest views on predestination and reprobation, see p. liv.

chief cardo controversiæ between Remonstrants and Contra-Remonstrants was not an pro omnibus et singulis mortuus sit Christus? sed quis finis et fructus sit Christi in eis pro quibus est mortuus, not whether he died for all in some way, but whether he died for all equally, and whether the end and fruit of his doing so was merely to remove legal obstacles, and render salvation possible; or whether it did not also secure the salvation of a certain definite number, and that not a small, but large, number of our lost race.¹

But at any rate, the adoption of the eighth paragraph in chap. viii. of the Confession did not end the contest between the divines, and set them altogether at one. These Minutes show that, when the Larger Catechism was being prepared, another effort was made by the representatives of the Davenant school to get their opinions distinctly sanctioned and positively expressed in that formulary. A committee, apparently of English members only, prepared and brought up for discussion (p. 369) the following questions and answers:—Q. Do all men equally partake of the benefits of Christ?—A. Although from Christ some common favours redound to all mankind, and some special privileges to the visible Church, yet none partake of the principal benefits of His mediation but only such as are members of the Church invisible. Q. What common favours redound from Christ to all mankind?—A. Besides much forbearance and many supplies for this life, which all mankind receive from Christ as Lord of all, they by him are made capable of having salvation tendered to them by the gospel, and are under such dispensations of Providence and operations of the Spirit as lead to repentance.’¹ These questions and answers were first agreed to be discussed, and then referred back to a Committee with which the Scotch Commissioners were associated. The questions and answers adopted in session 873 (pp. 392, 393) are probably to be regarded as their report; and the answer to the question, Are all they saved by Christ who live within the visible Church and hear the gospel? wears the look of an attempted compromise, admitting on the one side that ‘the gospel, where it cometh, doth tender salvation by Christ to all, testifying that whosoever believes in him shall be saved, and excludeth none that come unto him;’ and affirming on the other, that ‘none do or can truly come unto Christ, or are saved by him, but only the members of the invisible Church.’ This affirmation is warranted both by the Lambeth and the Irish Articles; but there are few nowadays who will not grant that it was more cautiously expressed in the shape in which it ultimately appeared in the answer to the sixty-eighth question of the Larger Catechism: 'All the elect, and they only, are effectually called, although others may be, and often are, outwardly called by the ministry of the Word, and have some common operations of the Spirit, who, for their wilful neglect and contempt of the grace offered them, being justly left to their unbelief, do never truly come to Christ.'

One subject more in this important chapter must yet be noticed. It has been said even recently, by a dignitary of the sister Church, that the statement in Section 7 is a melancholy one, and complaint is made that it has not yet been expunged. May it not be fairly replied, that they have no right to speak severely of this who have not yet made up their minds to expunge the minatory clauses from the Athanasian Creed, and that they who think that the apparent severity of these clauses would be sufficiently mitigated by a Synodical declaration should be the last to refuse to us, in explanation of this sentence, the benefit of the Synodical declaration long before made by the Synod of Dort, with the full assent of the Anglican divines? That Synod place among other obloquies which they say the Reformed Churches not only do not admit, but also detest with all their heart the opinion, 'that as election is the fountain and original cause of faith and good works, so in like manner reprobation is the cause of infidelity and wickedness.' To the same effect Calamy says: 'It is most certain that God is not the cause of any man's damnation. He found us sinners in Adam, but made none sinners.'¹ And Arrowsmith, in explaining Rom. ix. 22, 23, says:—

'I desire to have it punctually observed, that the vessels of wrath are only said to be fitted to destruction, without naming by whom, God, Satan, or themselves; whereas, on the other side, God himself is expressly said to have prepared his chosen vessels of mercy unto glory. Which was purposely done (as I humbly conceive) to intimate a remarkable difference between election and preterition, in that election is a proper cause not only of salvation itself, but of all the graces which have any causal tendency thereunto, and therefore God is said to prepare his elect to glory ; whereas negative reprobation is no proper cause either of damnation itself, or of the sin that bringeth it, but an antecedent only ; wherefore the non-elect are indeed said to be fitted to that destruction which their sins in conclusion bring upon them, but not by God. I call it a remarkable difference, because where it is once rightly apprehended and truly believed, it sufficeth to stop the mouth of one of those greatest calumnies and odiums which are usually cast upon our doctrine of predestination, viz. that God made sundry of his creatures on purpose to damn them,—a thing which the rhetoric of our adversaries is wont to blow up to the highest pitch of aggravation. But it is soon blown away by such as can tell them, in the words of the excellent Dr. Davenant, “ It is true that the elect are severally created to the end and intent that they may be glorified, together with their head, Christ Jesus ; but for the non-elect we cannot truly say that they are created to the end that they may be tormented with the devil and his angels. No man is created by God with a nature and quality fitting him to damnation. Yea, neither in the state of his innocency nor in the state of the fall and his corruption doth he receive anything from God which is a proper and fit means of bringing him to his damnation.”¹ Sedgwick, in his Riches of God’s Grace Displayed, says : ‘ The just cause of a sinner’s damnation is of and from himself ; never lay it on God’s decrees, or want of means or helps.’ ‘ What could Christ do more ? He calls, and cries, and knocks, and entreats, and waits, and weeps ; and yet you will not accept of him, nor of salvation by him. Thou must thank thyself for all thy miseries. Thou wilt confess one day, I might have had mercy. I was offered Christ and grace. I felt him knocking by his Spirit ; but I slighted him, grieved him, and rejected him, and now it is just with God to shut the door of mercy against me.’—P. 42.

Had these statements been found in the writings of any modern Scotch divine, they would probably have been pointed to as a signal but melancholy proof how far men can be persuaded to stretch the meaning of their creed to reconcile it with modern ideas and kindly feeling, when, if they were true to their convictions, they ought rather to abandon or modify it. But occurring as they do in the writings of men who took an active part in framing the Westminster Confession, and continued to be held in honour and put in places of high trust by the Puritan party, they seem sufficient to show that a Calvinism less pronounced than can be attributed to Dr. Crawford and his friends, had its defenders and representatives in the Westminster Assembly, and that those who have failed to discover any traces of this are no safe guides in regard to the opinions of the Assembly, and the comparative liberality or narrowness of its teaching. I believe Dr. Crawford¹ only fairly represents that of the more moderate divines both in the quotation already given (p. xxvi.), and when he says:—

‘The decrees of God are merely his purposes. He alone, except when they are prophetically announced, is cognizant of them; and he alone, if we may so speak, is influenced by them; at least they have no direct influence on any besides him. They are God’s secret designs for the regulation of his own procedure. But they are not rules or laws prescribed for the guidance of others, still less are they powers or agencies exerted for the coercion of others. . . . It is not by his purposes at all, but only by his actual procedure, that any influence, whether compulsory or otherwise, can be exerted over us. A further error in reference to this subject has arisen from ignoring or overlooking the fact that the purposes of God are to a great extent only permissive. That they are so, is evidently the doctrine of our Confession of Faith. For while we are there told that God from all eternity did unchangeably ordain whatsoever comes to pass, it is added immediately after, as a qualification of this statement, yet so as thereby neither is God the author of sin, nor is violence offered to the will of the creatures, nor is the liberty or contingency of second causes taken away, but rather established. These words plainly imply that the purposes of God are only permissive in so far as they have respect to those events which are to be brought about by the will of free agents, and more particularly in so far as they have respect to the commission of sins of which it would be gross impiety to suppose that God is in any sense the originator.’

And I am satisfied that, in the quotation he adduces from Dr. South, he has furnished all that is needed as an answer to that so often adduced from Tillotson, if indeed more is needed than Dr. Arrowsmith has said. South, as well as Tillotson, was trained under the Puritans, and had less sympathy with them in many things; but his clear, strong intellect led him to reject with scorn the flimsy arguments by which it was sought to cover with obloquy or contempt a doctrine which had commanded the reverence of Augustine, Anselm, Bradwardine, Hooker, Ussher, and even Lord Bacon, as well as of Calvin and the Puritans. Speaking of the divine purposes, South says: 'Be they never so absolute, yet they have no causal influence upon sinful actions; no, nor indeed upon any actions else, forasmuch as the bare decree or purpose of a thing produces or puts nothing in being at all. It is, as the schools call it, an immanent act—that is, such a one as rests wholly within God, and effects nothing without him.'

The ninth chapter, 'of Free-will,' supplies another striking proof of the caution and judgment of the framers of the Confession. Differences had shown themselves among the Continental divines at least early in the seventeenth century, respecting the nature of this freedom. Several of them had abandoned the more simple teaching of Calvin for a system apparently more philosophical. The full development and scientific statement of this system was reserved for Jonathan Edwards in the following century. It is not the case, however, as some assert, that Edwards was the first who attempted to wed predestinarianism to necessity. During the seventeenth century, several of the Continental divines had laboured to effect the same object. If Chaucer is to be trusted, a similar attempt had been made in England by Bradwardine even before the Reformation. The idea is present, in germ at least, in the writings of Tyndall,¹ one of the most noted of the English Reformers, and in a more developed form in the writings of some of the later Puritans. I cannot doubt, therefore, that the Westminster divines were acquainted with it. Yet they have contented themselves with the older and apparently less philosophical view, and may claim from us some credit for their far-sighted wisdom. The system of Edwards which fascinated Principal Hill and Dr. Chalmers has not commended itself, either to the greatest Scottish philosopher or the ablest defender of Scottish Calvinism in our day,¹ as an aid in the defence of the Scripture doctrine; and most of us would refuse to stake our creed on the truth of this questionable and much questioned system.

The teaching of Chapter XI. on Justification has been charged by some as being exaggerated. There is hardly any charge which, in my humble opinion, could be made with less foundation. It is true that in this chapter the teaching of the Church of Rome is directly negatived, and that this may not be done in those earlier Confessions which were drawn up before the Council of Trent had closed its sittings. But surely this can be no great stumbling-block to any true son of the Reformed Church; nor should the articulus stantis vel cadentis ecclesiæ, as here set forth, prove a 'rock of offence' to really earnest and inquiring men. Hardly in any confession will a more cautious and carefully balanced statement be found of this doctrine, and the related doctrines of faith, and the assurance of faith, and of the complementary truths brought into prominence in the Antinomian controversy. It is in substantial harmony with the teaching of Hooker and Ussher, and free from the exaggerations with which some of the early Reformers, and even Bishop Downam, have been charged. The fact and order of union with Christ is more prominently brought out in the Catechisms than in the Confession, but they are presupposed in the latter too. The phrase, 'the obedience and satisfaction

Baxter takes the same view of this chapter, and maintains that 'our own Assembly gave an example of modesty in these points to those that will follow it.' He adds shortly after the following words, which I commend to the thoughtful consideration of those who imagine that the Assembly was too ready to bind heavy burdens on men's consciences:—'Many other moderate passages I could show in our Assembly's Confession to those that have need to imitate them.'—See his Confession of his Faith, chap. ii. sec. 6.

of Christ,' was in all probability meant to indicate a leaning towards the view made exclusive in the revised Articles of 1643 and in the Independent Confession of 1658: 'His whole obedience and satisfaction;' 'Christ's active obedience unto the whole law, and passive obedience in his death.' But it is at least more indeterminate than the latter phrases; and as it was suggested and accepted by Mr. Gataker¹ during the revision of the Articles, may have to be read in the light of the debates which took place when that revision was being made. These are not contained in this third volume of the Minutes of the Assembly, having taken place in 1643, shortly before the Scotch Commissioners came up. The speeches of Dr. Featley, who seems to have led the debate on one side, were published at the time; and these, taken in connection with the notes contained in the first volume of the MS. Minutes, are sufficient to give a general idea of the course of the discussion. The main question which occasioned difference among the divines, was that which had been raised by Piscator and Tilenus on the Continent, viz. whether it was not the passive obedience or satisfaction of Christ alone which was imputed to believers for justification. This view was ably defended by Gataker, Twisse, and some others. The more generally received view was advocated with no less ability by the Episcopalian Featley and many others, and the majority of the Assembly appeared to be in favour of that view. Then Dr. Featley (as the Prolocutor Twisse had previously done) called the attention of the Assembly to a letter of King James, written to the Reformed Church in France on this very controversy, and recommending that it should be consigned to oblivion as one 'plane nova nec necessaria,' 'a conciliis non definita, a patribus non tractata nec denique a scholasticis ipsis agitata.'² This was probably the reason, that though most of them favoured the views of Ussher and Featley, they were content with a more general expression than they at first used, and that in return Gataker agreed to abstain from further controversy about the matter.

The chapters in the Confession on Sanctification and on the Law of God—so strongly yet so carefully worded—are such as could hardly have been looked for in the earlier days of the Reformation. But as the gross excesses of the Anabaptists in Germany, and the Spiritualists of Geneva, led Calvin to elaborate his chapter on the Decalogue into one of the most masterly disquisitions in his Institutes; so the turbulence and licence of the Antinomians in England in the time of the Civil Wars, led the Westminster divines to examine these matters more narrowly, and to affirm in the most positive manner, the necessity of sanctification and the perpetual obligation of the moral law. The language of both chapters, it will be seen from pp. 272, 274, etc., was very carefully discussed and somewhat altered before they finally passed in the Assembly. In particular, the last five words were left out in the following clauses, ‘which power is not contrary to the work of the Spirit of Christ, . . . but sweetly complying with it, and is subordinate unto it;’ one member having objected to them. In regard to the fourth commandment, they teach a higher and more consistent doctrine than was maintained by Luther, or perhaps even by Calvin, yet not higher than had been embodied in the Irish Articles, and in the second book of the Homilies of the English Church, as well as in Acts of the Scottish Parliament and General Assembly in the time of Knox.

In Chapters XXIV. and XXV., on the Church and the Communion of Saints, we have a doctrine taught even more thoroughly catholic, as it seems to me, than that which is set forth in the Articles of the Irish Episcopal Church, of the teaching of which the compilers of our Confession have so largely availed themselves. In addition to one invisible Church, to which all the true elect of God are acknowledged to belong, and particular visible churches composed of professing believers in particular nations (both of which are expressly owned in both formularies), the Westminster Confession recognises one visible Church, to which all throughout the world who profess faith in Christ and union with him ought to feel that they belong, and with the members of which they are bound, as God gives them opportunity, to cultivate union and communion. In almost identical terms with the other Reformed Confessions, it propounds the positive marks which indicate the purity and standing of any particular branch of the one Church. Yet, with a moderation rare in such times, it abstains from inserting the negative statement found in the old Scotch and several contemporary Confessions, viz. that 'neither antiquity nor title usurped, nor lineal descent,¹ nor multitude of men approving, are assured tokens whereby the immaculate spouse of Christ is known.' This statement, if but calmly weighed by certain controversialists, would, methinks, induce them to reconsider their hasty verdict on the two Confessions, at least to the extent of owning that the former is as little to their mind as the latter.

The doctrine taught in Chapters XXVII., XXVIII., and XXIX., as to the nature of the sacraments generally, and of the Lord's Supper especially, is such as could have grown up nowhere else so surely as on British soil, where the truth was slowly and gradually developed in the minds of the Reformers, was watered by the blood of the martyrs, and so was finally and firmly rooted in the affections of their countrymen. It is, in brief, the teaching of Cranmer, Latimer, and Ridley; of Hooker, Ussher, and many others, their true-hearted successors in the south, as well as of Knox, who from his long residence in England, and with English exiles on the Continent, has thoroughly caught up their warm and catholic utterances. This teaching is as far removed from the bare remembrance theory attributed to the early Swiss Reformers, as from the consubstantiation of Luther and the local or supra-local presence contended for by Roman Catholics and Anglo-Catholics. It is so spiritual, yet so really satisfying, that even some High Churchmen have owned that it would be difficult to find a better directory in the study of questions relating to this sacrament than is supplied in the Confession of Faith; while those of another school freely grant that, on the doctrine of the sacraments, they 'do not perceive a shade of difference from the teaching of the Church of England.' The language throughout Chapter XXIX. is as nearly as possible identical with that of the Irish Articles.

The chapter on the Civil Magistrate, while adhering closely in some parts to the very words of the Irish Articles, emphatically sets out a different doctrine as to the limits of his power. Its doctrine in those days would probably have been admitted by few who did not belong to the Puritan party; but the Revolution Settlement of 1688 rests on it. The question whether the magistrate was under Christ as Mediator was intentionally left open (p. 310). The sentiments expressed are in several places nearly akin to those of Article XXXVI. of the Belgian Confession. It is the only chapter in which a close resemblance can be traced between the two, and I consider it not a little remarkable that the Westminster divines should be found turning to Holland just for that which, from its history and conflicts, Holland was best fitted to teach. Some, I know, will have it, that though the limits of civil obedience are rightly defined in this chapter, too much is allowed to the magistrate in connection with religion. But such should consider that what is here allowed is less than was claimed for him in the old Scotch and other early reformed confessions, and far less than was conceded in the English and the Irish Articles. Nor, in fairness to the compilers, must it be forgotten that the assertion of the magistrate's rights circa sacra is accompanied by an explicit statement of the manner in which his rights are to be exercised, and that the two must be taken in connection.¹

¹ 'For the better effecting whereof, he hath power to call synods, to be present at them, and to provide that whatsoever is transacted in them be according to the mind of God.' Reynolds' commentary on this is: 'The Christian magistrate may interpose by his authority (if necessity require) to forbid and moderate' disputes. 'He may . . . call conventions and colloquies, wherein there may be a fraternal and amicable debate and composure of them. And if, after all this, differences be not perfectly healed . . .

All that is here claimed for the magistrate is needed to vindicate the course followed both in England and in Scotland at the time of the Reformation, and less than is here given cannot well be demanded while an established church continues to subsist. It may be said, however, that if the statements in Chapter XXIII. are pretty carefully guarded, those in the last section of Chapter XX. are less so. I admit at once that the language there used is capable of a harsh construction, and probably was so construed by stricter English and Scottish Covenanters. Yet the words do not necessarily require such a construction, and were not so construed by all who assented to them. If an unlimited toleration of all teaching however blasphemous, and of all practices however revolting, is not to be openly proclaimed (and no Christian state has yet ventured to proclaim it, nor any Christian church to recommend it), and if all power is not to be taken from the magistrate of guarding the sanctity of the Lord's day and the marriage bond, and of preserving peace between contending sects, both Christian and non-Christian, I do not see how less can well be affirmed, to bring out the truth that men are not to turn liberty into licentiousness, but are responsible to God and to society when they abuse it.

It was surely expedient that such a declaration should follow the noble statement then for the first time enshrined in the confession of a Christian church: 'God alone is Lord of the conscience, and hath set it free from the doctrines and commandments of men which are in anything contrary to his word or beside it, if¹ matters of faith and worship; so that to believe such doctrines or to obey such commandments out of conscience is to betray true liberty of conscience; and the requiring of an implicit faith and an absolute blind obedience is to destroy liberty brethren must mutually bear with one another, and pray for one another, and love one another.' 'In making laws and penalties, be tender towards the weak consciences of your brethren. . . . Magistrates do with good reason expect to have their sanctions obeyed rather than disputed; but they must remember that they are brethren as well as magistrates, and therefore must take heed of writing or binding heavy burdens.'—Sermons in 1657-8.

of conscience and reason also.' The principle here enunciated, it appears to me, is the very root of Puritanism,¹ and the goodly tree which has sprung from

¹ Some will have it, that English Puritanism from its origin was narrow and illiberal, and that it lagged behind all other parties in the matter of religious toleration. It cannot be denied, at least, that it led the van and bore the brunt of the battle in the struggle for civil liberty; and that shows unmistakably in what direction its principles tended. Its ecclesiastical struggle was also from the first a struggle for liberty, at least in things indifferent, and things not expressly enjoined by Scripture; and to the last it was more willing to tolerate differences within than without the Church. It objected to the gradual tightening of the subscriptions in the English Church, desiring that these should be limited to the Articles, and to those of them directly relating to matters of faith. Among its first uses of its victory in 1640 were the abolishing of the Court of High Commission, and setting aside the canons of Archbishop Laud, which had required the clergy should bind themselves by oath never to consent to changes in the government of the Church. The Westminster divines themselves, from their earnest desire to form one comprehensive Church, did not require subscription to their directories for worship and for church government, or exact conformity to their minute details, as Laud had done to those of the Prayer-book. It has been doubted whether the English section of them meant to make their Confession more than the norm of public teaching, like the Irish Articles of 1615. A sentence of Tuckney's has been often quoted, in which he says, that 'in the Assembly he gave his vote with others that the Confession of Faith put out by authority should not be either required to be sworn or subscribed to . . . but [only] so as not to be publicly preached or written against.' But in his famous sermon on 2 Tim. i. 13, a copy of which is still preserved in the University Library at Cambridge, he advocates such forms of sound words not only as declarations of what we ourselves believe and judge that all should believe, and 'desire and require that all should profess, or at least not openly contradict, with whom we join in nearest church communion;' but also 'as communiois tesserae et iudices'—badges of our Christian church communion, and great helpers and furtherers of it, 'whereby uncomfutable divisions may be prevented, and the peace of the Church the better preserved, while we all profess the same truth and speak the same thing.' Cheynell shows the same toleration in his sermon before the House of Commons in March 1646; and as much has been said of his extravagances, it is right this should be recorded to his credit: 'I conceive it is requisite to a Christian state to hold forth the Christian religion in a wholesome form of sound words that cannot be condemned, that there may be a sweet harmony between all the churches of Christ; and if a Christian state shall find it necessary to descend to some disputable points in their Confession that they may top the rising errors of the time, I shall never move that learned men of a different persuasion should be forced, or by preferment tempted to subscribe or swear, to that form against their judgment, to which the civil sanction is annexed, because I know full well what a great temptation it was to young and old in the time of the Prelates' reign to subscribe to such forms as they had never thoroughly examined, because they could not be preferred unless they subscribed. Yet I humbly move that men's mouths may be stopped from blaspheming or reviling the truth of God, held forth for the

it will not die while Christianity lives. It is no longer, thank God, the principle of a party, but is almost universally admitted; and many seem disposed to forget who first so announced it, and finally made the announcement a reality by years of stormy conflict and heroic suffering, while others stood aloof or acted the easy part of candid friends. It may be that the Westminster divines did not at once fully perceive all the consequences of this noble principle, and that it was necessary they should be taught by adversity what they had failed in part to apprehend in the day of their prosperity. But this will ever remain as their unquestioned honour, that they first reclaimed for liberty a large province in which the civil and ecclesiastical authorities had previously claimed an absolute and arbitrary sway. In addition to a considerable amount of toleration within the Church in things of minor importance, they ultimately acquiesced in a larger amount of it without the Church than had been enjoyed in England before.¹ If that toleration was far increase of Christian uniformity.' The Church of Scotland, however, while agreeing with the English Puritans as to the details of worship and government, has always required her ministers to regard her Confession of Faith as something more than a norm of teaching, to which they were to conform in their public ministrations; and by Act 1693 she was specially empowered to require all her ministers to own it as the confession of their faith, and the true doctrine to which they will constantly adhere. When we look at the history of Presbyterianism in England and in our own country since the seventeenth century, we think we have good cause to be thankful for the course the Church of Scotland has followed in this matter.

The full history of toleration has yet to be written. Professor Masson, who in vol. iii. of his recent Life of Milton has made such an admirable contribution to it, has frankly admitted that the Church of England was more tolerant than the Church of Rome, and Scottish Presbyterianism or Scottish Puritanism was more tolerant (though the reverse is usually asserted) than the Church of England prior to 1640. He adds, that he believes the honour of the first perception of the full principle of liberty of conscience, and its first assertion in English speech, has to be assigned to the Independents generally, and to the Baptists in particular. But it grew of suffering, and there were far more Roman Catholic than Baptist sufferers at that time. In 1601, Bacon in a letter to Cecil advocated the toleration of Irish Papists. Six years before the Baptist Confession there appeared 'A Refutation of an Epistle Apologetical written by a Puritan Papist to persuade the permission of the promiscuous use and profession of all sects and heresies.' Of course, less liberal than is now enjoyed, or than the principle of the Confession would have warranted, it was greater than the gifted author of the Liberty of Prophesying is said himself to have advocated or practised when prosperity dawned on him. There are times when, in the interest of liberty itself, some restraints must be placed on it; and if ever there was such a time, it was at that in which the Assembly met, when the popular party were accused by their opponents of wishing to introduce anarchy in Church and State; and the House of Commons itself found it necessary to repudiate the charge. It is not strange if at such a crisis there were fears we now deem groundless, and misunderstandings we now deplore. But the Assembly, by limiting obedience to the lawful commands of civil and ecclesiastical authority, by limiting lawful commands in matters of faith and worship to things positively enjoined in the Word of God, or by fair inference deducible from it, and by recognising the right of the civil authority to form an independent judgment in things religious, helped

if the refutation appeared in 1605, the Epistle or Apology itself must have appeared a little earlier. I know it only through the refutation, in which it seems to be pretty fully embodied. The author of the latter is probably right in asserting that the writer of the Epistle was a Papist in disguise; but it is rather remarkable, if the common prejudice in regard to the Puritans was well founded, that he should have assumed the disguise of a Puritan. The following brief extracts may suffice to show the general purport of the Epistle: 'Let us hold on the same moderate course, and strive to prevail not by the temporal sword of His Majesty's power, but endeavour to overcome by the eternal sword of God's Holy Word, which, though it be sweet and not violent, yet is it a two-edged sword that entereth on every side, and pierceth more deeply to win the heart of man and alter his understanding for planting the gospel than any human force whatsoever.' 'To destroy all those that are in faith opposite to us were overmuch cruelty; to compel them to an external worship against their conscience were no less dangerous and damnable to us than for them; to impoverish them by statute laws were to impoverish ourselves, being so linked to them as many ways we are,—yea, it were a great weakening of the whole body of the estate to the detriment of our Sovereign Prince and of the Commonwealth; for the wealth of the subject is the treasure of the King, and the multitude of his people is his strength and glory.' Afterwards the author refers to the parable of the tares, and the lord's answer, 'Let them both grow together,' etc.; and says, 'If Christ will have it thus, why do you blame my advice, that a Christian king should do the same rather than use the sword of force and violence upon any the like occasions?' It is quite true that in 1644 the Assembly of Divines petitioned against a legal toleration of all sects and heresies, that very extreme things were to forward the cause of freedom both in Church and State, and to plant the seed from which, as the Word of God was better studied, a fully developed system of toleration could not fail to grow.

Such, I believe, is the general character of the Westminster Confession of Faith, such its thoroughness, yet such, on the whole, its moderation and catholicity. It is lined and scored with the marks of conflict, but the deepest and the broadest lines are those which run through all the Christian ages; which appear distinctly either in the Creeds of the early Councils, or in the writings of the greatest of the Latin Fathers, or which, if they are not found so prominently there, appear broad and deep in the teaching of the ablest theologians of the middle ages, and in a few instances are to be traced more certainly in the one or in the other, than perhaps in the teaching of Calvin, certainly than in that of Luther. The Assembly of divines which framed it, may be said, humanly speaking, to have come just at the last moment of time when such an Assembly said by many of its members, and that even the more moderate of them were pressing a comprehension rather than a toleration, just as many, who get far more credit, did thirty years later. But glimmerings of the truth were gaining access to the minds of the more moderate of the English Presbyterians, and find partial expression in the sermons of Calamy, Vines, and Manton, by 1647, and as full expression in the sermons of Reynolds under the Commonwealth, as in those of the more moderate Independent divines. Presbyterianism, it appears to me, never really had a fair chance in England till (see p. 418) 1659; and in the exuberance of an unsuspecting loyalty, it threw it away, and recalled the heir of the Stuarts without conditions. The main obstacle to its success in 1644 was, that it would not bow before Cromwell and his coterie, who consciously or unconsciously were following a course which could only end in revolution. Neither the virtues of his character, nor the glory and beneficence of his rule, must blind us to the fact that he and his friends are largely responsible for the defeat of moderate counsels in 1648, and for the terrible reaction against Protestantism in France, as well as against Puritanism in England, which followed his brief supremacy.

The ordinance against blasphemies and heresies, harsh and cruel as it seems to us, was not a tightening, but a relaxation, of the law put in temporary abeyance by the abolition of the Court of High Commission, and of the office of bishop. Offenders were no longer to be punishable for opinions held, but for opinions deliberately expressed. They were not obliged to clear themselves by oath, but must be convicted by the testimony of two credible witnesses, or by their own voluntary confession. The charge must be prosecuted and proved in the civil courts, and as I take it, at least in was possible—when Conformist and Nonconformist were not yet formally separated,—when men trained in the study of the Fathers, yet familiar with the principles and tendencies of the Reformation, were not so rare as they now are,—when the Church was still under the happy influence of a marvellous revival,—when the word of God was felt as a living, quickening, transforming power, and preached not as a tradition, but as the very power and wisdom of God, by men of ripe scholarship and devoted piety, who have remained our models of earnest preaching, and our guides in practical godliness, even unto this day.

If the Church's faith is to be, on the whole, a growing faith—a building up on a foundation already laid deep and firm in the past, and not a demolition of the earliest and most massive substructures, and even a remodelling of the foundation itself,—it is expedient that from time to time account be taken of the progress made, and attention be called to the structure as a whole. It would have been matter for real regret, had an age of such deep piety, and graver cases, before a jury. Cromwell himself, when at the height of his power, found it necessary to set limits to toleration and the freedom of church courts; and when the Toleration Act was passed at the Revolution, it was so not in general or latitudinarian terms, but to the definite and limited extent desired by the Puritans, the Baptists, and the Quakers. King William III., though probably as wise a monarch as ever sat on the throne of Britain, gave his assent to an Act for suppressing blasphemy and profaneness, by which it was provided, that if any persons having been educated in, or at any time having made profession of, the Christian religion within this realm, should by writing, printing, teaching, or advised speaking, deny any one of the persons in the Holy Trinity to be God, or should assert or maintain there are more Gods than one, or should deny the Christian religion to be true, or the Scriptures of the Old and New Testament to be of divine authority, he should the first time be subject to severe legal disabilities, and the second should suffer imprisonment for three years. Tillotson's successor in the See of Canterbury wrote, in support of these Acts and the King's injunctions, to the following effect: 'Every pious person of the laity should, if need be, be put in mind by the clergy, that he ought to think himself obliged to use his best endeavours to have such offenders punished by the civil magistrate, as can otherwise be amended. And that when he hears his neighbour swear or blaspheme the name of God, or sees him offend in drunkenness or profanation of the Lord's day, he ought not to neglect to give the magistrate notice of it.' Even the melancholy words of Rutherford were but the echo of those of the judicious Hooker (Bk. 8), that in matters of faith 'law should set down a certainty which no man afterwards is to gainsay.'

earnest action, and laborious learning, been allowed to pass without leaving some such record of its attainments as we have in the Confession of the Westminster Assembly of divines. To this, the product of their mature thought—the deliberate record of their common faith and principles—rather than to any extreme statement drawn up by isolated and crotchety individuals, it becomes us to turn, if we would know them as they really were, and would be qualified to judge of what they did to vindicate the truth of Christ, and work out our freedom, both civil and ecclesiastical. We may legitimately have recourse to their true-hearted successors, just as we may have recourse to the writings of individual members of the Assembly for help in understanding their common teaching; but if we do so, we must be religiously on our guard against importing into it aught which is merely a peculiarity of theirs, or is added on as a further development of its principles and teaching. Still more does it become us, while we refuse to make any one an offender for words uttered, it may be, lightly, and endeavour to construe the old creed as tolerantly as we fairly can,¹ yet to hold by it, as containing ‘the sum and substance of the doctrine of the Reformed Churches,’ and to decline all tampering with it. It will be time enough to think of change, when a school of theologians of riper scholarship and more patient study, of higher culture and deeper piety, shall arise among us,—not content to pick up their opinions even on minor matters at second-hand, but qualified, by acquaintance with the writings of these old divines and their true-hearted successors, to do them full justice.

But was not the Westminster Confession rejected in the land which gave it birth ere many years had passed? Indeed it was; and so, in a great measure, was all regard for God and things divine, and men surrendered themselves up to every excess of riot. The very King for whose sake so much was done and suffered, it is now proved, was not well seated on his throne when he began to plot for the reconciliation of his kingdom to the See of Rome. The court he gathered round him was the most dissolute and worthless which England for centuries has seen, and they, of whom better things might have been expected, contended but feebly against iniquity in high places. Those of whom the world was not worthy were sent forth to wander as outcasts from society, and from the Church of their native land, to prove, under contempt and persecution, the reality of the Christian principles they had professed in their prosperity, and their deep attachment to the constitution of their country. But though their Confession was cast off, its theology lived on notwithstanding, — lived on in the Episcopal Churches of England and Scotland, in the teaching of Leighton and Reynolds, and others of their old associates, who were faithful to God in the midst of abounding defection, — lived on, too, in the teaching of those who went forth from the National Churches, clave to it at all hazards, preached it by their lives when they could no longer preach it by their lips, and out of their deep poverty enriched future generations by those practical treatises, in which its theology will live while the English language continues to be spoken.

Moreover, when cast out in the land of its birth, it was taken in elsewhere. It was voluntarily taken in on the other side of the Atlantic by the children of the pilgrim-fathers, who under its tuition have grown into a great and noble nation, heirs with us of the Puritan traditions, and having at the present day, in addition to an Episcopal Church, which has yielded most of the minor changes sought by English Puritans, more than six thousand Presbyterian ministers, united in substantial adherence to its standards, and a large number of Independent, and of German and Dutch Reformed pastors, following closely its Augustinian type of doctrine.

This supplies the answer I give to those who assert that the Confession has failed in the object it sought to accomplish, and therefore ought now to be abandoned by the Church of Scotland. True, it has failed to bind together the Established Churches of England and Scotland; but it has not failed to bind the Church which has held by it, to many sister and daughter Churches of which she has no cause to be ashamed. It binds her to many in Scotland who have gone out from her, but who still cling to her standards and forms of worship, and perhaps at times rebuke her the more sharply just because they still love her. It binds her to the orthodox Presbyterian Churches in England and Ireland, in Canada and Australia, as well as to the great Presbyterian Churches in the United States of America. Our only hope of a really united Presbyterian Church lies in substantial adherence to it; and if we will only be true to our Church, and vigilantly improve our opportunities, I do not think we have any cause to despair of this, and even more extensive good. She needs no blank shield nor banner with new device, but only her old faith and life in Christ; and He who has preserved her as a witness for truths precious to the greatest doctors of the West, and bound up with their deepest spiritual experiences, may yet own her as evidently as He has lately done the little Jansenist Church of Holland, and say of her, 'Destroy it not, for a blessing is in it.' She has once already saved the Reformation in England, and may help to do it again.

Such happy results, however, must be sought for in a really Christian and unselfish spirit. If there be one lesson which the history of the Westminster Assembly teaches more emphatically than another, it is this, that lasting union and reform cannot be forced by any amount of skilful manipulation, but must spring and grow up from the plentiful outpouring of God's Holy Spirit. For this let us labour and pray, till He pour us out a blessing, so that there shall not be room enough to receive it, and cause us all to 'come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ.'

ALEX. F. MITCHELL.

BAILLIE'S DESCRIPTION OF THE WESTMINSTER ASSEMBLY.

(Letters, Vol. II. pp. 107, 108, 109.)

‘On Monday morning we sent to both Houses of Parliament for a warrant for our sitting in the Assemblie. This was readilie granted, and by Mr. Hendersone presented to the Proloquator; who sent out three of their number to convoy us to the Assemblie. Here no mortal man may enter to see or hear, let be to sitt, without ane order in wryte from both Houses of Parliament. When we were brought in, Dr. Twisse had ane long harangue for our welcome, after so long and hazardous a voyage by sea and land, in so unseasonable a tyme of the year: When he had ended, we satt down in these places which since we have keeped. The like of that Assemblie I did never see, and, as we hear say, the like was never in England, nor any where is shortlie lyke to be. They did sit in Henry the 7th’s Chappell, in the place of the Convocation; but since the weather grew cold, they did go to Jerusalem chamber, a fair roome in the Abbey of Westminster, about the bounds of the Colledge fore-hall, but wyder.¹ At the end nearest the doore, and both sydes are stages of seats as in the new Assemblie-House at Edinburgh, but not so high; for there will be roome but for five or six score. At the upmost end there is a chair set on ane frame, a foot from the earth, for the Mr. Proloquator Dr. Twisse. Before it on the ground stands two chairs for the two Mr. Assessors, Dr. Burgess and Mr. Whyte. Before these two chairs, through the length of the roome, stands a table, at which sitts the two scribes, Mr. Byfield and Mr. Roborough. The house is all well hung, and hes a good fyre, which is some dainties at London. Foranent the table, upon the Proloquator’s right hand, there are three or four rankes of formes. On the lowest we five doe sit. Upon the other, at our backs, the members of Parliament deputed to the Assemblie. On the formes foranent us, on the Proloquator’s left hand, going from the upper end of the house to the chimney, and at the other end of the house, and backsyde of the table, till it come about to our seats, are four or five stages of fourmes, whereupon their divines sitts as they please; albeit commonlie they keep the same place. From the chimney to the door there is no seats, but a voyd for passage. The Lords of Parliament uses to sit on chaires, in that voyd, about the fire. We meet every day of the week, but Saturday. We sitt commonlie from nine to one or two afternoon. The Proloquator at the beginning and end hes a short prayer. The man, as the world knows, is very learned in the questions he hes studied, and very good, beloved of all, and highlie esteemed; but merelie bookish, and not much, as it seems, acquaint with conceived prayer, [and] among the unfittest of all the company for any action; so after the prayer he sits mute. It was the canny convoyance of these who guides most matters for their own interest to plant such a man of purpose in the chaire. The one assessor, our good friend Mr. Whyte, has kept in of the gout since our coming; the other, Dr. Burgess, a very active and sharpe man, supplies, so far as is decent, the Proloquator's place. Ordinarlie there will be present above threescore of their divines. These are divided in three Committees; in one whereof every man is a member. No man is excluded who pleases to come to any of the three. Every Committee, as the Parliament gives order in wryte to take any purpose to consideration, takes a portion, and in their afternoon meeting prepares matters for the Assemblie, sets doune their minde in distinct propositions, backs their propositions with texts of Scripture. After the prayer, Mr. Byfield the scribe, reads the proposition and Scriptures, whereupon the Assemblie debates in a most grave and orderlie way. No man is called up to speak; bot who stands up of his own accord, he speaks so long as he will without interruption. If two or three stand up at once, then the divines confusedlie calls on his name whom they desyre to hear first: On whom the loudest and maniest voices calls, he speaks. No man speaks to any bot to the Proloquator. They harangue long and very learnedlie. They studie the questions well before hand, and prepares their speeches; but withall the men are exceeding prompt, and well spoken. I doe marvell at the very accurate and extemporall replies that many of them usuallie doe make. When, upon every proposition by itself, and on everie text of Scripture that is brought to confirme it, every man who will has said his whole minde, and the replies, and duplies, and triplies, are heard; then the most part calls, To the question. Byfield the scribe rises from the table, and comes to the Proloquator's chair, who, from the scribe's book, reads the proposition, and says, as many as are in opinion that the question is well stated in the proposition, let them say I; when I is heard, he says, as many as think otherwise, say No. If the difference of I's and No's be cleare, as usuallie it is, then the question is ordered by the scribes, and they go on to debate the first Scripture alleadged for proof of the proposition. If the sound of I and No be near equall, then says the Proloquator, as many as say I, stand up; while they stand, the scribe and others number them in their minde; when they sitt down, the No's are bidden stand, and they likewise are numbered. This way is clear enough, and saves a great deal of time, which we spend in reading our catalogue. When a question is once ordered, there is no more debate of that matter; but if a man will vaige, he is quicklie taken up by Mr. Assessor, or many others, confusedlie crying, Speak to order, to order. No man contradicts another expresslie by name, bot most discreetlie speaks to the Proloquator, and at most holds on the generall, The Reverend brother, who latelie or last spoke, on this hand, on that syde, above, or below. I thought meet once for all to give yow a taste of the outward form of their Assemblie.'

The Vow or Protestation taken by every member admitted to sit in the Assemblie.

'I do seriously promise and vow in the presence of Almighty GOD, that in this Assembly whereof I am a member I will maintain nothing in point of doctrine but what I believe to be most agreeable to the Word of GOD, nor in point of discipline but what may make most for GOD's glory and the peace and good of his Church.'

LIST OF THE MEMBERS OF THE WESTMINSTER ASSEMBLY,

In the order in which their names appear in the Ordinance calling the Assembly, or were subsequently added by the two Houses.

[An asterisk has been placed before the name of every one who, from these Minutes, or from Lightfoot's Journal or Gillespie's Notes, has been found at any time to have attended the meetings, and of every one who, in old editions of the Confession of Faith, is reported to have signed the protestation required to be taken by every member admitted to sit in the Assembly. The names of members added subsequently to the meeting of the Assembly are printed in italics, as are also the few particulars about the original members which are not taken from the Ordinance. Two very accurate lists of the members of Assembly have already been given to the public—the one by Mr. Meek, prefixed to Gillespie's 'Notes,' and the other by Professor Masson, in his recent 'Life of Milton.' It is with great diffidence, and only in a few minor points, I venture to differ from either. But having had to examine the Journals of Parliament, the MS. Minutes of the Assembly, with many contemporaneous documents, and the works of Wood, Fuller, Palmer, Brook, Neal, and Reid, I give the result of my own researches. Following the Ordinance as finally printed by order of the Houses on 20th June 1643, I include among the original members both Simeon Ashe and John Erle of Bishopton, and make the number of the divines to be 121, not 119 or 120. In the copy of the Ordinance inserted in the Lords' Journals of 12th June, the name of Ashe appears, but those of Sterry and Erle are omitted. In the printed copy, issued separately, the name of Shute is retained, and, as in that of 20th June, those of Sterry and Erle are inserted. The Ordinance being given at length in ordinary editions of the Confession, is not reprinted here, The names of Prideaux, Levet, Crook, Jennison, Lloyd, Soames, and March, should not be placed in the list of members. Whether those of Dillingham, C. Love, Moore, and Newscore, should stand in the list of superadded divines, I have been unable as yet positively to determine.—A. F. M.]

EXCERPTS from Vol. II. of the MS. Minutes, containing the first appointment of Committee to prepare a Confession of Faith.¹

Sess. 269.—August 20, 1644.—Tuesday morning.

A Committee to join with the Commissioners of the ¹ In his public letter, in October 1644, Baillie writes: 'The Confession of Faith is referred to a Committee, to be put in several of the best hands that are here;' and in that of 21st November, he reports that 'the Catechism is drawn up, and I think shall not take up much time; I fear the Confession of Faith may stick longer.' Again, on 26th December, he writes: 'We have near also agreed in private on a draught of Catechism, whereupon when it comes in public we expect little debate. I think we must either pass the Confession to another season, or if God will help us, the heads of it being distributed among many able hands, it may in a short time be so drawn up as the debate of it may cost little time.' Once more, on 25th April 1645, he writes: 'The Catechism and Confession of Faith are put in the hands of several Committees, and some reports are made to the Assembly concerning both; we expect not so much debate upon them as we have had in the Directory and Government.' In all probability, therefore, the matter for the Confession was to a certain extent prepared by the above-mentioned Committee, and the Committee appointed on 12th May 1645 (p. 91) would enter on its work with a certain amount of material already collected, though not digested into a formal 'draught.' After the several paragraphs, draughted by that Committee, were disposed of in the Assembly, they were again remitted to a small Committee for the review and final wording and methodizing of the Confession (pp. 110, 168, 245, etc.), all being once more reported to the Assembly.

The Catechism which Baillie reports to have been drawn up, and near agreed on in the end of 1644, was, of course, neither of the two ultimately adopted, but either that which had been almost completed, and to a considerable extent passed, in the Assembly (pp. 281, 282, etc.) before it was resolved to have two; or it may be that it was that Catechism still preserved in MS. in the Library of the University of Edinburgh, and ascribed to Samuel Rutherford. This probably had the approbation of the Scotch Commissioners, and would repay publication yet, though the Westminster Assembly do not appear to have availed themselves much either of its method or matter. The Larger Catechism, it will be seen, was drawn up before the Shorter; and though perhaps the latter embodies more of the materials of the original Catechism than the Larger does, and has been the most widely popular of the Assembly's symbolical books, it was that in the perfecting of which the Scotch Commissioners had least to do. Rutherford alone remained when it was being discussed in the Assembly. Tradition connects the name of Gillespie with its answer to the question, What is God? but it is doubtful if the answer to that question, even in the Larger Catechism, had been cast into the shape it now bears when Gillespie left for Scotland. Tuckney, it is admitted, took the chief part in preparing that Catechism. He was Convener also of the Committee which prepared the Shorter, though its more concise and severely logical answers are generally supposed to have been finally adjusted by Wallis.

OF THE SESSIONS OF

THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES.

Sess. 324.—November 18, 1644.—Monday morning.

SESS. 324.
Nov. 18,
1644.

A REPORT, made by Dr. Gouge from the ministers appointed to ordain, about Mr. Robinson; it is as followeth:—

R.—That the case propounded shall be taken into consideration by this Assembly.

Mr. Marshall—I conceive the ordination he hath received is a sufficient ordination. I cannot learn that Christ instituted any man to have authority to preach the word and administer the sacraments, but one that's to be looked upon as a preaching presbyter. For those two arguments propounded . . . The calling of him a deacon is but a mis-calling of him. True, the Scripture owns none but presbyters under that name; but if a man be ordained to another work, whatsoever his name be, it is not material. The power of ordination doth not depend upon the intention of the ordainers. I do not think it is unlawful for them to be ordained again.

orders be sufficient
minister.

Mr. Palmer—Speak a word concerning this business. I conceive the ordination of deacons is not good to all purposes without a new ordination. The Scripture . . . negative they did intend they should not be presbyters; the persons ordained did not intend it, and it was the general intent of the Church.

Mr. Young—Concerning this question now before us.

Ordered—That the report and this vote be transcribed

SESS. 324. and sent to both Houses of Parliament by the ministers
 Nov. 18, appointed to ordain that are members of this Assembly, 1644. with humble submission of the whole matter to their wisdom.

 Robinson's case.

[Mr. Ralph Robinson chosen to be pastor of the parish church of Mary Woolnoth, London, not being a presbyter, repaired to the ministers appointed to ordain, desiring to be ordained a presbyter for the charge aforesaid, and submitted himself to examination; but after some proceedings therein, he declined the ministers and way of ordination; alledging that he is already deacon, and supposeth that to be enough; and in case it be not, he hopes that within a year, there will be another more settled way of ordination, and then he may be ordained. This act of his the ministers appointed to ordain do conceive to be a waving and weakening of the ordinance; and that there is a necessity of having recourse both to the Assembly and to the Houses of Parliament for their direction and declaration herein, as well for the point of his admission to his charge upon a presentation to the place actually void, as the sufficiency of his ordination already attained.

Monday the 18th of November 1644.

The Assembly of Divines upon the debate of this case have resolved upon the question as followeth:—

Assembly's vote on this case.

1. This Assembly doth advise that they who have hitherto been ordained deacons only, according to the Form of Ordination used in the Church of England, be ordained presbyters before they undertake a pastoral charge in any congregation.

2. Those ministers appointed to ordain, who are members of this Assembly, shall carry up this case and the vote of this Assembly thereupon to the Honourable Houses of Parliament; with humble submission of the whole matter to their wisdom.¹]

Sir William Allison reported the necessity of sending down ministers to York.

Some motions made about holy days, to express something against them.

Ordered—Being the only standing holy day under the New Testament to be kept by all the churches of Christ.

Consider of something concerning holy days and holy places, and what course may be thought upon for the relief of servants (to meet to-morrow in the afternoon), wakes and feasts, whitsunales, rushbearings, and garlands, all other such like superstitious customs: Mr. Coleman, Mr. Wilson, Mr. Thorowgood, Mr. Delaplace, Mr. Hickee, Mr. Hardwicke, Mr. Harris, Mr. Gibson, Mr. Price, Mr. Corbet, Mr. Delamarch, Mr. Hodges, Mr. Bathurst, Mr. Maynard, Mr. Chambers, Mr. Woodcocke, Mr. Langley, Mr. Mew, Mr. Salway.

Dr. Burges—Give an account of the message, (1) for that of the Reasons . . . from the House of Commons they are pleased that you should take your own time, but so as that what speed may be, may be made in it: the other, the House of Commons will take into speedy consideration. No answer from the Lords; they were delivered. From the House of Commons, given us in charge, they desire to hasten up the Directory, and all such parts as are already prepared.

Sess. 326.—November 20, 1644.—Wednesday morning.

Ordered—That Mr. Wallis have a certificate without coming up to the Assembly.

Further
debate on Preface to Directory.

Dr. Burges moved that the debate yesterday being against a resol[ution] of the Assembly, that it may be put to the Q. whether there shall be leave to debate that business again.

Mr. Marshall—I crave leave to speak a little . . .

Dr. Gouge—This motion is not seasonable ; to question the covenant will not be seasonable.

R.—That Mr. [Mar]shall shall have liberty, or anybody else, to speak to that branch of the Preface concerning the Covenant.

Mr. Marshall—I did really understand that part to refer to the taking away the old . . . I desire the sense may be so explained as that the sense may not be contrary to our consciences. A Directory that I do receive by virtue of an antecedent oath must have an influence upon me for the observation of it. Then whatsoever you do not leave me at that freedom which God's word leaves a man that is unsworn. . . . That if it be possible one word or two might be put into the Preface to prevent the snares, I desire not to have it left out. . . . Add the word only.

Mr. Ny—That word takes off his scruple, but not mine ; because I except against the influence of this oath upon the positive part.

Dr. Burges—I accord with him that desires to express his scruple . . . if our solemn vow and covenant do make . . . but if nothing to impose anything new upon us, then it is all one, covenant or not covenant . . . If you will put in that word 'only,' you may do it, but will not satisfy him ; let him als— . . .

Mr. Ny—If the clause in the oath be extended to prudentials, as well as things of divine institution, then this is well expressed. . . . My sense of the covenant is, that it binds us to endeavour a uniformity, but only in institutions.

SESS. 326.
Nov. 20,
1644.

Mr. Goodwin—I have always expressed the sense thus : So far as we do agree, we should walk by the same rule, and that in institutions. . . . I did fall off from the ceremonies upon this ground, such things ought not to be put upon the churches of Christ ; and I think this is of the same nature.

Reference to the Covenant
in Preface.

Mr. Calamy—That which lies before us is not to show the meaning of the covenant. I am willing to put in the word ‘only’ . . . the covenant doth express those four particulars, in one Directory for . . .

Mr. Marshall—The force of the word ‘only’ is . . . this Directory, in the true, proper, native scope and intent of it, be a help for ministers, etc.

Mr. Herle—I am not against the putting in of the word ‘only.’ . . . I do not understand, but we have sworn to endeavour uniformity in matters of prudence . . . but consider the fitness of it here . . . the great business is carried on in a design, as, first in Scotland, then in Ireland . . . so it is said it is so here; first, a covenant must be taken, and then a debate upon pretence of prudence, and yet a pre-engagement . . . now if we make mention of this . . . will it not be make¹ use of in an advantage on the other side.

Dr. Burges—Seeing it pleased this brother to declare to us a story, yet we may not lay it aside upon that consideration, except we be guilty of any such design . . . if any reason proper for this Assembly to take notice of . . . upon the same ground you must never plead the covenant, nor use it, but throw it aside.

Mr. Marshall— . . .

Mr. Ny—Let the words go . . . ‘our meaning therein’ . . . ‘that contain the substance of the worship of God.’

Ordered—Dr. Burgess, Mr. Marshall, Dr. Gouge, Mr. Reynolds, Mr. Goodwin, Mr. Sedgwick, Mr. Burroughs, Mr. Calamy—To carry up the Directory and Preface to-morrow morning.

Further
 debate on Directory
 for Sabbath-day.

An addition offered by Dr. Burges—concerning keeping themselves to their own congregation.

Mr. Marshall—Your care will be to direct only those things that are proper to the particular business . . . for a family to do this is a question . . . whether it belong to the sanctification of the Lord's day or no . . . what is fit to be ordered about that belongs to discipline, and there take that course as near as God's word doth guide you.

Dr. Burges—Had you done no more than direct, what is to be done in the public service, then it had been proper to have left this out . . . You know the giddiness of the stragglers in this kind.

Mr. Sedgwick—Two things taken for granted: (1) That there be a good minister in every congregation; (2) that every church will hold all, but this cannot be as yet.

Mr. Palmer—I desire you would take a serious consideration of this business before you . . . for the words or syllables before you, you may dispose of them . . . but for the other, it is of that extreme necessity as that, without some care of it, all your order will be altogether in vain. . . . Hundreds of people will come to no church at all . . . nothing more destructive to the right performance of family duties than that one should go to one place, and another to another. . . . A double objection made: (1) Concerning conscionable ministers in every place; (2)¹ . . . Neither of these ought to stand. . . . You make a discipline for congregations that have sufficient ministers . . . for that of churches . . . that weighs with me more than all the rest . . . be[cause] so many churches that cannot contain . . . therefore they should be assigned that we make known where to build more.

Sess. 327.—November 21, 1644.—Thursday morning.

SESS. 327.
Nov. 21,
1644.

Ordered—That Mr. Vaughan have no certificate from this Assembly.

A report from the 2nd Committee of a Directory for marriage—read and debated.

Directory
for marriage read and debated.

Mr. Henderson moved to speak something of espousals before marriage . . . Motion to leave out that . . . ‘no part of the worship of God.’ . . . I doubt it is not a mere carnal contract: it is the covenant of God . . . civil contract may be dissolved with consent of parties.

Ordered—The 2nd Committee do consider of something concerning contracts or espousals to be added to the Directory of marriage, and make report to this Assembly. They are to meet this afternoon.

Debate about that ‘civil contract.’

Mr. Wilson—It may be a civil contract, though called the covenant of God. So is magistracy.

Mr. Goodwin—8 Eccl.: Keep the king’s commandments in regard of the oath of God. True, the oath is a worship; but the business about which he swares is not of that nature. ^{2.} Eccl. viii.

Mr. Lightfoote—That oath of God is peculiar to the throne of David,—the oath from God unto David, not from David to the people, or the people to David.

Mr. Scaman—If this relates to magistracy amongst the heathens . . .

Mr. Palmer—To order. . . Two things spoken to together . . . consider that first ‘no part of God’s worship.’ . . . Certainly this is a truth: nothing that is of the second table properly can be a part of worship . . . that which is altogether common to heathens that have no knowledge of God can be no part of worship. . . . Alter them thus . . . It is no ordinance of the first table, nor peculiar to the Church.

Mr. Gillespy—Leave out all that first clause, begin with the positive . . .

Mr. Rutherford—The former part denies marriage to be a sacrament; so there is good reason to deny it to be a

SESS. 327. part of God's worship, be[cause] divers hold it to be a Nov. 21, sacrament . . . there is some divine thing in some civil 1644. contracts as in magistracy, so something more than that — is merely civil in marriage . . . formally it is no worship.

Mr. Buroughs—I think it should be put out, be[cause] there being so much given to the minister, the people will think it to be a part of God's worship.

Mr. Goodwin—I desire a great consideration of this thing, because many stumble at the point of marriage, because appropriated to a ministry; and by the law no man may be married lawfully but by a minister. . . . In the Old Testament, marriage was not appropriated to a priest, but—as in the case of oath—to the elders of the city. . . . That there is something divine in marriage must needs be acknowledged; and as in the marriage of the heathen, I do not know but that that is a type of Christ and His Church.

Called to order.

Mr. Bathurst—Marriage cannot be denied to be a worship of God . . . was not amongst the heathen . . . said a vow betwixt man and man is no part of God's worship, but I never heard that it was any other. . . . 17 Ezek. 16 v. Here is covenant betwixt man and man done in a sacred manner. This is termed the oath of man, and yet God owns it for His,—a worship done to Him.

Dr. Temple—Where is there a vow betwixt man and man that is not made to God, and so must be a part of worship?

Mr. Buroughs—I know no difference betwixt a vow betwixt man and man and a promise.

Mr. Rutherford—This is taken for granted by those that hold it a worship: that it, if formaliter, is a vow. This is to be proved. Marriage is only the consent of parties; a vow is annexed unto it. There is a covenant of God in marriage, but that formally it is anything but the consent cannot be proved.

Mr. Seaman—If the formality lies in the consent of the parties only, then what need we have all this . . . if he take for¹ formality for essentiality . . . for that of marriage being before the magistrate, the family and posterity being concerned in it, therefore the magistrate must come in . . . the concurrence of the minister is not virtute officii, but delegationis.

SESS. 327.

Debate on Directory
for marriage continued.

Earl of Pembroke— . . . Not meddle with the learned part . . . beg to take a care of the manner of doing of it ; it is of great consequence. . . . I would be sorry any child of mine should be married but by a minister.

Dr. Temple— . . . Offer a word . . . said marriage is not formaliter a vow . . . I deny that, upon this reason, be[cause] the consent may be still kept, and yet the marriage dissolved.

Mr. Rutherford—I never heard it denied but that the formality and essentiality of marriage consists in the consent of the parties . . . confounds marriage and the solemnization of marriage . . . This Directory concerns the solemnization . . . The vow belongs to this, but is not the formality of the marriage itself ; for then they that are married without any vow or oath of God, as amongst the heathen, are not lawful marriages. . . . Said marriage may be dissolved, and yet the consent of the parties standing. This a paradox to me, that they should be married parties when the oath is broken. . . . that which Christ saith of His command, that uncleanness may dissolve, there will not be a warrant in that text for separation of marriage.

Mr. Henderson—Here are questions that are not very necessary.

Mr. Walker—This controversy might easily be decided: marriage betwixt heathens and Christians for substance are one and the same ; yet be[cause] marriage amongst Christians must be solemnized with prayer, exhortation, and instruction, therefore the best way is to . . . For that example of Ruth . . . the elders of the city were not only elders of the people, but there were Levites amongst them.

Mr. Herle—Scarce ever doubted but that matrimo-

SESS. 327. nium fundatum necesse sic, but then that consensus must the minister is Judex and Preco; has not only to pronounce them man and wife, but to judge of it as for the rules of marriage. . . . It will be better thus far alter your vote—of the solemnization of marriage.

Mr. Wilkinson—I humbly present something that I do not find so manifest in the Directory as I wish it were.
 It is a remedy of God for preservation of chastity . . .
 desire there may be some strong bonds expressed to bind us unto chastity . . . if death in a contracted person, if . . .

Mr. Hardwicke—An easy and fair way out of this debate by . . .

Mr. Scaman— . . . The question is of the essential constituents . . . said marriages amongst the heathens solemnized
 . . . if the magistrate make no law for the solemnization.

Mr. Harris—I look upon this day's work as a sad business. We can express nothing, do nothing, but one thing or other cast into the way to hinder us.

Mr. Palmer moved to recommit it . . . and to express something that may express wherein the validation of marriage doth consist.

Sess. 330.—November 28, 1644.—Thursday morning.

Mr. Palmer made report of the business of marriage committed to him.

riage again
debated.

Mr. Marshall—Most of those rules are fit to be considered . . . but the penalty is something too high . . . for the usual hours that would not be fit counsel to give, something may fall out to make a marriage to be this day, and yet without great inconvenience it cannot be this morning. The Lord hath not appointed any set time . . . you may say nothing of the time, so it be done with sufficient testimony. A clandestine marriage may be in those hours . . . And for that not valid that is not done in that hour, if it should be a nullity, I question whether it be fit to give this advice . . . Say no marriage approved of but that that is done by a lawful minister before the congregation.

Mr. Gillespy—To second that last said; the words, as they are, will make a great debate . . . that of 8 and 12,

Mr. Ley—Though you do not limit it to the hours of 8 and 12, yet you may limit it to daylight.

Mr. Vines—I think it may be done by candle-light as as well as daylight . . . If there be testimony from an eldership, you may recommend it to be done in the church; but otherwise I know not but it may be done in a chamber as well as a church.

Mr. Calamy—Here are two things in question: (1) Not valid except publicly solemnized . . . Many think no necessity of a solemnization. I think marriages a civil ordinance. . . . If the civil state will say that marriage is not valid without the solemnization of it in public, then it is not valid. If we advise this, we shall do God a good service.

Mr. Palmer . . .

Mr. Marshall—Those will be requisite to be considered in due time, but whether put it into the Directory. . . . We may desire the Parliament to think of some fitting penalty for those that shall . . .

Directory
for burial.

Mr. Marshall—Be[cause] the drawing up of these reasons doth concern ourselves as distinct from the dissenting brethren . . . therefore you would please to bestow an afternoon or two to accompany the Committee appointed, that the body of all the members being present, they may be read over, and only read over and so passed.

Ordered—That the Answers of the Assembly to the reasons of the dissenting brethren shall be first considered in a Committee of the whole Assembly—the dissenting brethren excepted; this Committee to meet in the afternoons till the answers be perfected, and then the answers to be read in the full Assembly of all the members that will be present. And that the several Sub-committees do first meet one afternoon and compare all the parts of their answers, to prepare them for the Committee of the Assembly.

Mr. Wilson— . . .

Mr. Rutherford— . . .

Mr. Herle—A Directory, the end of it is for worship. Now, how this will fall under that, I know not. This will multiply our work. The apostles did avoid all overburdening of themselves with serving tables. . . . It may

SESS. 333. prove a great snare. If exhortation, I know not why Dec. 3, word and prayer shall not go together.

Mr. Whitakers—I do not see any force of argument why this Directory may not yet stand. . . . I think that a minister stands in a general relation to all his people, and every man in all the providences of God is to get his heart affected . . . to be sensible of the death of his people is his duty . . . Said why a Directory for men when buried and not born ; you know that presently after birth they are brought to baptism, something is done presently after. . . . Said if a Directory for some, then for all. . . . I see not why not for all . . . Dorcas . . . Said the apostles would not serve tables . . . there is no transgression . . . rules in Scripture to take all occasions of doing good. . . . At death of friends to be sensible . . .

Dr. Burges moved that the Committee would bring in something concerning visiting of the sick.

Mr. Marshall—But one only thing worthy of your consideration in this business, whether the minister, when he is present, may give a word of exhortation. To say he should be invited to be there as a minister would press far that it is a ministerial work.

Mr. Hill—Two things may be hinted : (1) No necessity that the corpse be carried into the church ; (2) The corpse be first buried.

They were called in.

Reverend and worthy brethren, this Assembly having received a letter and booke presented by your hands . . . they have read the letter . . . and find in it many expressions of the pious and large affections of our reverend brethren in those parts, that having suffered do the better know how to comfort with the comfort they . . . who are able to speak by experience to us. . . We did not think fit to call you in to acknowledge the receipt of a book till we had read the autograph. . . All we have been able to do is to read the letter. We are not able to give so full an answer, but it is resolved that there shall, with what convenient speed we can, [be] an answer given in writin[g] both by way of acknowledgment of the book and letter . . . and am to give you thanks for being the hand. Report 'of holy places' debated.

Mr. Palmer— . . . The general notion of holiness, as it relates to man for all and outward things, is such a dedication to God as that it becomes His, and so no longer ours. If it were so under the Old Testament, I would be glad to know why it is not so now. That it was so in the Old is plain, in that 'burnt all the houses of God in the land.' This can be no other but the synagogue, which had no typical relation. Debate of report as to holy places.

Mr. Rutherford—This is acknowledged by all divines. No holiness in the time of gospel in any place. They say that the holiness in the Old Testament was all typical holiness. In New Testament there is no more holiness of place than of time, except the Lord's day. The time may be called holy, be[cause] the action performed in it is holy, and this will not bring any denomination of holiness . . . Synagogues only called God's houses because God was worshipped there, and the burning of them was a profanation of worship secundario, in respect that they are set apart for order's sake to the worship of God. We desire this to be proved, that it is the Lord's will to appropriate any place so to Himself as that it shall not be ours. . . . The houses of the New Testament have the same civil use that they would have had in the Old Testament.

Mr. Gillespy—I speak to your order . . . consider whether not . . . no contrary opinion in the negative that no one place is holier than another in the time of the gospel.

Dr. Burges moved to reduce the three propositions to the last, which is comprehensive of what is necessary to the Directory.

Mr. Scaman—There is no way to expedite ourselves but consider how much is necessary upon this head for the Directory. . . . Confine yourselves to the affirmative de futuro. . . . If you form any proposition, it must be doctrinal, though it be negative.

Mr. Marshall—I do not yet understand any necessity of meddling with the business at all. It is a thing that is done. We have churches everywhere. No doubt about it, some¹ only two sorts of people: (1.) Some who think places not fitly prepared without a consecration; (2.) Others think that places having been consecrated are so polluted that the servants of God should not make use of them.

Mr. Palmer—So as the place . . . As no dedication or consecration doth make the place² more accepta[ble].

Mr. Goodwin—Where have you any ground for so differing proceedings? It is worth our debate to consider what sins they are that must be the object of excommunication. . . . Said signs of repentance must be clear and evident; so it must be in every case. Why, then, is it added there?

² Gillespie's Notes of Debates, p. 97.

Mr. Ny . . .

Mr. Marshall—All that is held out in this may be proved out of the story of the incestuous Corinthian, in 1 Cor. [v.].

Mr. Herle—I do agree we should be very careful in this work ; but if we should take in hand to set in a catalogue of sins, we should do as they go to the Rota to learn to sin. . . . Why should it rest in the nature of sin to make it liable to excommunication . . . Sin hath its height from the will, then the least sin that is may arise to a contumacy . . . A little stone thrown with a strong hand may kill a Goliah.

Mr. Marshall—To order.

Mr. Ny—We grant that if any sin come to obstinacy, it is liable to excommunication ; but this branch speaks of a case in which there are some atrocious sins committed . . . There may be a fundamental error in one age, that is not a fundamental error in another, as the resurrection to be denied now is a fundamental error.

Mr. Henderson—In the matter of excommunication, this difference of sins use to be observed by divines . . . I think the words of this paper are the words of that treatise on the power of the keys set out by our brethren.

Mr. Vines—For that of fundamental . . . there is something like it in Chillingworth . . . If fundamentum in se, it is semper . . . We need not talk of obstinacy here, for that is when one is convicted ; this is founded upon the notoriety of the heinous sin. . . . The sin being heinous, we need not go to name it. We only name it by those aggravations which is the proper naming of sin to excommunication. . . . All the reason is not to call the sinner to repentance, but to purge the Church from scandal.

Dr. Gouge—It is true that there are some sins in their own nature not to be suffered. . . . One word may be put in to satisfy all, ‘as incest and such like.’

Mr. Gillespy—Much hath been spoken that needs not at this time . . . All that is spoken to specify that sort of sin that deserves excommunication, that is not before you . . . But for the ground of such a different proceeding in several sorts of public sins . . . the ground of that will appear

Mr. Goodwin—I observe your Directory is defective in the main thing.

Mr. Reynolds—A sin may be heinous two ways.

Mr. Goodwin—Whether there may be an excommuni- cation without admonition in case of heinous sins, this is the question.

Mr. Marshall—It is stated in the paper, in such sins they may proceed against them without the usual degrees.

Mr. Goodwin—Without the usual degrees, that is admo- nition. Then doth not the apost. in the 1 Corin. v. make all other sins parallel to that of incest? The doctrine is for one as well as another . . . You have but this example of excommunication, and here is also the rule.

Mr. Marshall— . . . a short answer to this argument, because both in the same place. . . . Because they are named in the same chapter, it doth not follow that they are parallel sins, or must be dealt with in the same way. . . . Those sins are condemned in other epistles, and [he] doth not will them to excommunicate for them.

Mr. Rutherford—There should have been an argument against the very words of the Directory. . . . There is nothing in this paper for excommunication ipso facto, nor anything that doth exclude all the degrees of process . . . Only the paper saith there is no necessity to proceed in those usual degrees, yet there are degrees in the paper to such, as in case they be swallowed up in grief. . . . I must return humble thanks . . . I am assured that my infirmities have appeared too much in this Assembly, that at some times I have offended some, and that at some times I have taken up time in speaking, to hinder others that would have spoken better . . . and . . . I am confident that He that hath begun the good work will finish it . . . Your difficulties have been many . . . The greatest difficulties sometimes was the Prelacy and Book of Common Prayer . . . but other impediments are fallen in, which I pray God may . . . You have here some dissenting brethren to whom I owe great respect . . . a word of love and affection . . . I wish they prove to be as unwilling to divide from us, as we have been unwilling to divide from them. I wish that instead of toleration, there may be a mutual endeavour for a happy accommodation . . . There is a certain measure of forbearance, but it is not so seasonable now to be talking of forbearance, but mutual endeavours for accommodation . . . It is true two are better than one, but it is not true of parties . . . since God hath promised to give His people one heart and one way . . . Now, if you have any other commands for us that are going home, we shall be careful of them; though we go from you, we shall [be] present with you in spirit.

Dr. Burges—It hath pleased the Commissioner to acknowledge it a great happiness that he had opportunity to be amongst us so long. I think the Assembly will acknowledge it a happiness to have enjoyed their help . . . For his modest expression of speaking in the Assembly, the Assembly acknowledgeth with all thankfulness . . . It's a pious and Christian close . . . What he hath desired is the desire of us all . . . I hope you will be pleased to let them know how much we do value their pains.

Prolocutor ordered by . . . I am unfit for such an employment that divers times do fall upon me . . . All of us have had great experience of your learned pains; for myself, I have taken great comfort in your learned discourses.

senting us this is of purpose to prevent long, dangerous, and difficult debate. Three sorts of opinions in this Assembly: (1) some hold it only in the congregational presbytery; (2) others think that both the congregation and greater assemblies may do it; (3) others, it may be, think that particular congregations may not do it . . . These words are so tied down as that all they who can but submit to have the business carried before a greater assembly may enjoy their own way, their own opinions, and practice . . . The most obvious objection is, we were better speak out where it will become this Assembly to do it ambiguously . . . But I shall tell you what satisfied me . . . I look upon our present divisions . . . We have another party to contend with who may be much helped . . . But their hopes and expectations may be frustrated; and therefore I thought, if at the present we can settle it in such a way as that men of several judgments, it would be a great mercy at the present, and it may please God that we may grow up together.

Dr. Burges—I only move this for our better and more orderly proceeding . . . Looke upon this as a point of practice . . . if any debates against it contain ourselves within the limits of our paper.

Mr. Goodwin—The business hath been of long expectation, and needs a great deal of composedness of spirit to proceed in the debate about it . . . I am sorry that there fell out any occasion of heat amongst us, than which there could not be a greater . . . I hope for this debate it shall not any way unsettle our spirits . . . There is use of synods to frame up the spirits of men to a way of peace . . . I think the winding up of things in a way of peace and accommodation should not be when things are brought in by a committee or brethren as this was, but after debates of things . . . That this may be made up so as to satisfy two differing judgments in this Assembly . . . But it had been well if you had taken in some of the other, that they also might have been consulted with in it . . . I desire in the debate nothing may be stated. . . .

Mr. Marshall—Said things that are for accommodation are done after debates, when the divisions do appear.

A.—I think this did appear abundantly in former debates . . . If it had been only a suspected thing, it might have been too much care or fear aforehand, but nothing is more clear than the declared opinions of brethren on this point . . . That which seems most of all to touch upon those that present the paper is, that it was not communicated . . . If any neglect in it, it is to be imputed me. . . . After some few of us had digested it, few days before I presented it to you . . . One of the brethren that are dissenting I advised with, and gave it home with him one night, and did not limit him to communicate it to whom he pleased . . . The Commissioners of Scotland did really intend that it might suit with their way, so that it might be but heard in the classis.

Mr. Henderson—The differing judgments of some of the brethren in the Assembly are very well known already, and as well as can be made known by a debate . . . For this exception there is as much spoken as may give satisfaction . . . I humbly move that if any conference with our dissenting brethren may prepare it more for the public debate, it may be done . . . I have heard some of our brethren say, if they could get satisfaction in this, they did not see any great difference.

Mr. Goodwin—The motion now made is a good one, only I do not know what you can well go to.

Mr. Rutherford—I conceive the question now will be whether this controversy will be tanti that the Assembly must determine what is the primum subjectum potestatis jurisdictionis. There is no necessity to determine this, be[cause] many writers learned have written accurately of it, and yet never settled this controversy . . . 2. Not a Protestant Synod that can be produced that hath determined it on either side . . . The words will carry nothing that may condemn either side . . . Though it be not committed by the Assembly, yet there are divers things that are equivalent to a commitment.

Dr. Burges—I desire we may not cast any prejudice upon this paper, which was drawn up to prevent heats . . .

If you commit this, I desire it may be to think of some way to make this passable, and not draw us to other debates.

Mr. Ny— . . .

Mr. Goodwin—If you had any other thing to be disputed, it were well if either you entered upon now or resolved to do it . . . I suppose this paper hath lain long upon the thoughts of many . . . It will concern us to have time more than an afternoon.

Mr. Reynolds—This put into the hands of our dissenting brethren, and they to consider how far they can agree, and where they stick.

Mr. Ny—There is no reason for that motion . . . This is as if this paper were a rule, which is no more a rule than any paper. . . . Let us frame new propositions de novo without looking upon this paper.

Mr. Rutherford—The whole Assembly did agree of a commitment of this; the end is unity and peace, without any hurt or violation of truth, the same is recommitted . . . This paper is ordered to be taken into consideration, and therefore the recommitment is no reversing of your former order.

Mr. Palmer—I desire you would continue your thoughts . . . One thing I desire may be avoided . . . not to speak of three parties . . . For your Committee I desire the Assembly may be a Committee, that the Assembly may meet as a Committee, and then no man shall be excluded.

Mr. Coleman—This proposition takes for granted—(1) that the preaching is no peculiar privilege, but the sacraments are; (2) that the sacraments are no converting ordinances—I mean the second conversion . . . I see no difference why the sacraments may not as well work upon a man fallen as the ministry of the word.

Mr. Ny— . . . For that of private exhortation therefore public. A. Two differences: (1) private is to be formed directly to this man's state to make him more ashamed, but in the public you may preach six or seven sermons that may not reach him for humiliation. (2) There is nothing of the honourable communion of saints in private. It is no more than a family communion.

Mr. Hodges—If the minister should in public reprove this man, would it not tend more to his shame, than to do it in private?

Mr. Marshall—For that, that the communion of saints doth not lie in private conversation, but in public ordinances . . . A. Church communion doth carry the private communion of saints as well as the public. . . . If divers duties are to be performed in private virtute communionis, then the communion of saints reacheth to the private . . . If excommunicating shut out from communion of saints, then look what falls under that notion, that¹ he must be debarred from.

Mr. Delaplace—I know not what excommunication means except ab omnibus sacris; and we have types of it in the law, etc.

Mr. Palmer—It is not enough to exclude the excommunicate from the preaching of the word, except we can find a rule in the word to debar them of it. . . . If it be in the word, it must be in one of those, let him be a publican, etc., or put him away from amongst you, and delivering unto Satan.

Debate about excommunicate person joining in prayer. Debate on excommunication resumed.

Mr. Rutherford—He that joins in prayer prays with the Church, and saith Amen, but not so in hearing of the word.

. . . The minister may pray with him, but not for him ; and therefore there is not par ratio.

Mr. Calamy—Consider the state of the question. You must suppose he comes not as a member, and you must suppose him to be a child of God ; and then prayer may be used for his recovery out of that sin, as well as hearing. . . . He is not excommunicated from the invisible Church, nor from the inward communion with Jesus Christ. . . . He is to be admitted to the prayers because he is fit to pray, and to join in prayer he is fitter than a heathen. . . . This will be an argument to show that we prefer the prayers of the Church before preaching. . . . The reason why excommunicate persons were not admitted in primitive times was because the Liturgy was in order to the sacraments, from which they were excluded.

Mr. Rutherford—It is granted that those that have an internal communion with the invisible Church may be excommunicated . . . and so it is argued they are fit to pray be[cause] of that communion. . . . A. The fitness must be a visible and external fitness, else he speaks nothing. . . . If he speaks of an inward fitness in regard of faith, then he is as fit for the sacrament of the Lord's Supper as for the prayers of the Church. 2. Said the Church may pray for him, therefore with him. . . . I deny the consequence, and the words out of the 'Synopsis Purioris Theologiae'¹ do not affirm so much. . . . True, in ancient times they were

Dr. Temple—Upon the same ground you have admitted him to the mystery¹ of the Word for his restoring. . . . Why should there not be the same act of Church fellowship in joining in hearing God speak to us that there is in our speaking to God?

Mr. Marshall—I cannot dispute against the thing. That of joining in prayer is darker to me; not satisfied that he should come to join in prayer. . . . Not that I think the one to be more an act of communion, but upon this ground; he is not to be admitted to those ordinances, but only as means to bring him to repentance. If any of those ordinances could reach him with as good effect in his absence, then he ought not to be present at any of them; but preaching cannot do it, prayer may.

Mr. Reynolds—He hath prevented me. . . . Two arguments afoot: one from the parity of the ordinances, the other from the mystical communion. For the former there is not a parity. . . . In the business of prayer the case is others.² . . . Joining in prayer is formaliter communion. . . . For the other. . . . True, a regenerate person may be excommunicate; yet it follows not that because he is in the body of Christ he may join in such. . . . There is communio habitualis . . . yet, quoad exercitium, this actual communion may be suspended.

Mr. Carter—There is an apparent difference betwixt. . . . Prayer is a communion out of the whole company, but taking in the word is a particular act.

Mr. Ny—For that of interruption of our communion with Christ quoad exercitium [it] is not safe.

tized. In this case the elder is a judge, but he will not therefore say that he may baptize. . . . It is altogether denied that the single suffrage of one ruling elder is of more worth than the pronouncing of the sentence by the minister. . . . That any should preach the word, or pray publicly, but only the pastor, I think will be denied by the Assembly.

Mr. Vines—What act to be done in the congregation that may be done by a ruling officer.

Mr. Greenhill excused upon his alleging of his weakness.

The paper reported being voted, there was some debate about what we should next debate. . . . There was something remaining in the report not yet concluded in the Committee, which was a great stick, about going to the presbytery in case of absolution . . . which be[cause] the Committee could not meet about it in the afternoon, the Assembly entered upon the debate and consideration of it, to see if there may be anything found out to satisfy all sides. . . . Some forms were tendered, and were debated in the Committee, but not concluded. Of the forms were these: 'Where, if nothing be alleged against him, he may be brought before the classical presbytery, which being also satisfied with his humiliation and trial of his repentance, he is to be absolved from the sentence of excommunication by the particular eldership, and before the congregation where the offence is given, which may be done in this manner' . . . or thus: 'The classical presbytery may also be satisfied from him with the signs of his unfeigned repentance, and when his repentance is manifested, he is to be absolved from the sentence of excommunication, which may thus be done' . . . This last was testified by Mr. Marshall; the Commissioners of Scotland were willing to assent unto if one word may be put in, viz. upon examination. . . . Mr. Henderson offered two more . . . Dissenting brethren assent to last of proposed forms.

The dissenting brethren brought in the paper again, and did assent to the last form: ‘The signs of his repentance appear,’ etc., which was debated.

Dr. Temple—I fear this will be a seed of perpetual division.

Mr. Marshall—I think rather it may be a means of concord. . . . We are not to expect that we shall be able to carry all things in practice first; that may be another work at another time. . . . Therefore what we can attain at the first, let us receive it.

Dr. Gouge—I desire the accommodation may be upon equal terms, no mention of the congregation.

Mr. Bridge—I know not how that paper ‘of Reformed Churches’ can stand. . . . I must enter my dissent to the former vote.

Mr. Rutherford—The latter proposition hath been spoken against, but they have not contradicted the words of the proposition. . . . Something said against that ‘errors in Reformed Churches,’ but it is said ‘commonly held in the

Mr. Marshall—I am sorry that they do still harp upon that string, as if the Committee did hold out any such thing. . . . If the proposition stood alone, the most clear sense of it will be that which the Commissioner makes ; but take it as it is, a negative of the other affirmative.

Mr. Henderson—We conceive that a man may be excommunicated for an error that is not fundamental, though he do not hold it against the light of his conscience.

A form was tendered by Dr. Burgess. . . . 'But for other errors, sins, and practices, as the truly godly may sometimes be left unto, although all should endeavour to help their brethren against them, we do not judge that they should be shut out of the communion of the Church.'

Dr. Temple—I offer another way : put both the propositions into one ; one will explain another.

Mr. Reynolds offers this . . . 'Such other errors in judgment as are matters not of faith, but opinion, not being in their own nature pernicious, but such wherein the learned and godly men may and do usually differ.'

Mr. Ny offers one word to be added, 'pernicious to godliness.'

Debate

Mr. Ny—We do not rightly understand order, nor the hedge. . . . If by the hedge you mean the prudential rules of men, it cannot be of more value than . . . Where is the word unity applied to any particular visible Church, but only to the general . . . Wherein is this unity? Is it in doctrine? That you will not say. Is it in practice?

Dr. Burges—Always ready to be under the pedagey¹ of this brother. . . . It may be he will think everything in discipline must be an institution . . . and we may agree to prudentials.

Mr. Sed[g]wicke offered this . . . ‘But such as cannot come up in their practice to everything established, and do not subvert the order appointed by Christ in His Church.’

Sess. 370.—January 30, 1644.—Thursday morning.

Mr. Chambers offered a form.

 resumed.

Mr. Rutherford—There is one thing in the first paper, ‘impenitently persisted in,’ I desire that may be left out, and this put in, ‘when sufficiently convinced of them.’ In matters of doctrine it is a hard thing to convince that the erroneous person is convinced in his own conscience.

Mr. Ny—The reason of the Committee is a principle, I think, granted amongst us; we are so to bind on earth as in heaven. I think the sin is not bound in heaven except impenitently persisted in.

Mr. Rutherford—This is an argument brought before, and it received an answer. The cause and reason is if the delinquent be convinced by sufficient evidence and testimony of the fact. . . . To say that impenitency must be as clear as the fact itself, I conceive this is formaliter in the mind and heart.

Mr. Newcomen—You have agreed to excommunicate for the sin you do not say contumaciously persisted in.

Mr. Ny—We say atrocious sins may be excommunicated; but what will you call atrocious sins, such as are materially so?

Mr. Rutherford—The atrocity itself is called a leaven, and the apostle charges that that be purged out.

Ordered—The Committee formerly appointed for the wording of the votes of the Assembly do draw up the Directory for excommunication, and report on Monday morning.

Committee to put in form the Directory for excommunication.

Dr. Burges, Mr. Tuckney, Mr. Chambers.

Mr. Rutherford—I think this the saddest session that ever I sat in regard of the reverend brethren’s renouncing of the whole accommodation. . . . I desire to know whether we shall proceed in the way of argumentation or in the way of accommodation in the receiving¹ particulars.

appeals.

Dr. Gouge—Agreeableness to the word of God doth not impose a necessity.

Mr. Gataker—I think it should rather be said, 'be.'

Dr. Smith—I think it should be said, 'should be.'

Mr. Seaman—There is a mistake . . . for there can be no appeal but grounded upon one of those two suppositions: either the judge is not competent, or the cause he is not to meddle in . . . The lawfulness of the point of appeal is the first thing to be debated, and so it is a proper expression that 'it may be.'

Mr. Rutherford—If a congregational assembly judge of heresy, is not this of common concernment, and so belongs to a national assembly? . . . That 'is agreeable' doth neither infer a negative or affirmative precept, it. . . .

Mr. Seaman—If nobody questioned the lawfulness of appeals, then it were well, but I would we were over that rub.

Mr. Henderson—The word appeal is sometimes taken more largely, and sometimes more strictly. . . . Properly, appellation is from a competent judge, but he finds a gravamen he proceeds unjustly.

Mr. Herle—We take the word appeal too largely and too strictly.

Mr. Reynolds—Say 'may be, which being they are to be from the inferior to the superior.'

Mr. Carter—It hath not been the manner of this Assembly. . . .

Mr. Bridge—I give a reason against the proposition. You have not said what you mean by an appeal. Your second reason doth express it . . . That such an one may not be. To me it seems diverse and opposite to the way of the Old and New Testament. . . . 17 Deut. the place brought for appeals . . . This place is diverse from, if not

SESS. 377. opposite unto that. (1) It is in case a matter too hard for Feb. 10, their judgment, therefore only in that case; (2) it is not 1644. the person wronged, but the judge, to carry it up; (3) all Debate that this judge was to do, was only to declare what ought continued. to be done. He was not to be cut off by that court . . .
 For that of the New Testament; 18th of Matthew is against it. There the sentence is to be executed by the Church. A Synod or Sanhedrim is nowhere called Ecclesia . . . Said 15 Acts: Paul and Barnabas were sent up, but was there any person wronged, and did they rescind the sentence?

Mr. Scaman—He speaks of three places of Scripture.
 Touching the last place, I should not instance in that as touching appeal. That proves a transmission, but not an appeal. . . . But for that of 18th of Math., I cannot but wonder that he should think it so strange for the word Ecclesia to be taken for an assembly of officers. It is a company of this sort or that sort, applied according to the nature of the company and business for which they meet.
 . . . It is the weakest argument in matters of divinity to build our opinions upon dictionaries and grammars. . . .
 For that in Deut. there is a distinguishing of causes greater and lesser, and in that there is an appeal implied. Suppose an inferior court would meddle with the thing too hard for them, what relief is there for the oppressed man? . . .
 For that observation this court hath power of sentence, but not of execution, then there must be a greater court than this, and so three courts; but clearly he is to sentence definitively, so as that there is no appeal to any other, except from the same to another.

Mr. Herle—You do a little overrun yourselves. You are fallen upon the proofs, when yet the proposition is before you. . . . If this be brought by way of argument, it lies thus: there is nothing spoken but in difficult cases, ergo, no appeal. I deny the consequence. . . . Suppose those places do not hold it out so clearly, yet it follows not, but [?] it may be in other Scriptures.

Mr. Rutherford—He did draw arguments out of those places to prove the proposition is not true. . . . The first argument is not against the proposition. Said 17th Deut.

is opposite to appeals, be[cause] it is when the case is difficult . . . I deny the consequence. The difficulty of the cause is but one case of appeals. There is a gravamen that is the ground also of appeal.

Debate on
appeals
resumed.

The dissenting brethren shall be a Committee to bring in propositions concerning appeals.¹

Mr. Bridge—I take it for granted that this is the sense, an appeal to a hig[h]er that hath power to rescind the sentence.

Mr. Herle—Appeals are larger than the rescinding of the sentence.

Mr. Bridge—The argument was this: that which is diverse from and opposite to the way of Old and New Testament, is not agreeable to the Word . . . Not from the 18th of Math. . . . In that place the power of sentence and censuring is put into the hands of Ecclesia, and therefore we must inquire what that is . . . Carolus Sigonius saith this² . . . All agree in this, it is taken for such a court where the people are a part of the court. . . . Ecclesia in the Old Testament is never put for elders alone. . . . If so, the power of censuring cannot be in a Synod alone . . . Again, according to that, the Church or court told hath the power of censure; but if a man do appeal then, they have not, for appellation hinders the sentence, and so they cannot reduce this into act. . . . By the 18th of Math., the Church is commanded to excommunicate the person that doth not hear, but in this way he shall not do it. . . . By this a man shall never be obstinate till the National Assembly have admonished him. . . . It is agreeable to the 18th that the censure should appeals

Mr. Goodwin—Add one thing. . . . If the sentence of excommunication be pronounced by the Church, there is a binding in heaven. . . . Where the power lawfully lies to excommunicate, there is in the 18th of Math. a binding in heaven; but this all the power on earth cannot rescind.

Mr. Herle—The first part of his argument was answered yesterday, or the text will answer it to take in the coetus will not stand with this two or three. . . . Said, then the Church shall not be able to do that which it is bid to do. . . . He doth restrain the word Church too much. A congregation is not only here meant, nor hearing and telling the Church is only meant excommunication. . . . Said the party may not come to be excommunicated till he comes to highest Assembly. True, it may be so; yet he hears the Church still . . . when such a judicatory doth pass a sentence from which there lies no appeal, or the party doth not appeal.

Mr. Palmer—Concerning this of 18th of Math. the argument reduced to four heads: (1) From the word Ecclesia. For this I am not able to give at present any particular instance where the Septuagint doth use. . . . Congregation often used in the Old Testament for only the congregation of elders. 82d Psalm . . . where the words do signify the people; yet it must be taken respectively. . . . 9th Joh. . . . 12th John . . . for fear of the Jews, that was not the common people. . . . (2) For the necessity of proceeding, there are two sorts of appeals—a gravamine; a sententia. Though the first be granted, yet . . . (3) For the binding in heaven. . . . That is a mistake. . . . Where there is a lawful authority, if they use that authority lawfully, then it is bound in heaven. . . . But if this doth not appear . . . In case he be indeed wronged, is it bound in heaven? . . . They confess another Church may relieve him. Certainly this they cannot do if bound in heaven. . . . (4) For that consent of the people, I conceive this place in the 18th of Math. doth not imply the people. Shall there be two distinct bodies—the eldership and people—that have a plurality of voices, that sit . . . and all this called one Ecclesia.

Debate

Mr. Seaman—For that word Ecclesia . . . Do they verily believe the word must be interpreted by heathen authors, or parallel words in Old Testament, or a peculiar use of it in the New Testament? . . . If by heathen authors, then it must be interpreted according to those several policies in which they live and about which they treat. . . . In Scripture we are not to interpret the original word by the Septuagint, but the Septuagint by the original. . . . Christ doth allude to the policy of the Jews. Take out but those two word[s] dic ecclesiae, and it may be understood of the Jewish policy. . . . For that appeals suspend a sententia, and then the power of the Church may be frustrate. . . . There are appeals before the sentence, and after the sentence. . . . Said it is bound in heaven. . . . Consider out of the circumstances of the text a double power of binding and loosing held out: (1) That in a particular brother. . . .

Mr. Simpson—An appeal is thus described a provocation from a lesser to a superior judicatory. . . . It lies not in numbers. . . . Then there should be appeals from greater. . . . Called to order be[cause] they are the same arguments. . . . He proceeded. . . . Or else there must be some law of God, and this either: (1) The law of nature, or [2] Some Scripture injunction. . . . The law of nature teacheth a man to appeal as well from those who do most gravare, and therefore from a national Assembly. . . . The law of nature teacheth to go to any that can relieve them. . . . Neither is it any Scripture injunction. . . . The law of God saith sit tibi ethnicus, and yet the appeal saith not so. . . . Nothing of an appeal in the 1 Cor. v. . . . You lay this upon the law of nature, contradistinct from an institution.¹ . . . All that is said is a consequence from Math. 18. Authority can never be raised by a con-

According to the law and the reason of the thing, the common law makes two sorts of judges—ordinarius and arbiter. From the latter there lies no appeal. (3) There can be no greater punishment for the appellant than in a particular congregation. (4) There are many inconveniences upon those appeals: 1. Vexatious suits bred and continued; 2. You will defer for a long time the using of the means of repentance to the offender—at least a year; 3. In those appeals you lay down a ground of monarchy and primacy: the Pope argues from appeals; 4. Then you may appeal from King and Parliament to a national assembly; 5. Ames, in his 2d tome, 139 page.¹

Mr. Herle—For that against subordinations, it is one part of the proposition [in] deba[te]. . . . Two heads of his argumentation: (1) Not by the law of nature, be[cause] that prompts to any help. . . . The law of nature here is taken too largely. . . . You must take it here for the reasonable law of nature for the governing of men, which cannot be done without order. . . . A law properly is that rule that hath a moral obligation, and then it must imply a reasonable creature. . . . Said if the law of nature, . . . a gravamen in the highest Court. . . . The law of nature hath its sphere in this reasonable capacity. It is bounded when its extent . . . though possibly in that highest bound there may be a gravamen, yet the law doth not put any notion beyond its sphere. . . . We cannot possibly in any society to² arrive to a certainty of relief; if we can attain to that which is the most moral and rational help it is sufficient. . . . For that of Scripture it hath no rule. . . . That of the 18th of Math. next spoken to, and the rest, do but amount to a negative argument. . . . For the inconveniences . . . said it will lose time and hinder dispatch. . . . A. The canons say this, excommunicatio et articulus mortis equiparantur, and no time is too long when we consult about the lives of men. The like may be said of civil courts. . . . Said an institution must require not a consequence, but have an immediate authority. . . . The law of nature, taken in its right sense, is a good institution. . . . Said a judicibus electis non provocatur. . . . True, but so that they be elected to that very purpose, but not if they chosen to have an appeal from, as there are some judges that are to impetrate, others that are [to] fill up and end the cause. . . . Said there is no greater punishment, therefore no provocation to a higher. A. There is a greater punishment, as the apostle holds out in the case of the incestuous Corinthian. . . . As in matters of civil death, there is as much difference betwixt two deaths as betwixt life and death. . . . For that of vexatious. . . . It is better to admit of a mischief than an inconvenience. . . . For that the Popes claim . . . he doth it personally as Christ's vicar, and they make it summum (?) rei Christianæ. . . . But to unite all under one counsel, no men deny. It is not the claiming power of appeal, but his power of appeal.

Mr. Seaman—The arguments seem to be well composed, and therefore deliberate. . . . Four arguments used: (1) From the description of an appeal out of the proposition. The main argument, no law of nature. . . . Some of his expressions do savour of a self-conviction, if it teach a man to appeal from most wrong to those that are able to relieve him. . . . A Church is of a double confederation,—a common confederation as a society, and as such a society. . . . Why should those privileges that belong to human society be denied unto them except there be an institution to the contrary? . . . It is lawful to appeal from any servant to Jesus Christ. . . . For that application of marriage, a question whether that be only of the law of nature negatively. . . . Said the law teacheth to appeal from a national Synod as well as others. . . . A. There is no end of appealing in regard of time, though in regard of policy you may come to the highest pitch. You may appeal from them at that time to another time. . . . For that 'no Scripture injunction;' that hath¹ [best] be left till we come

Mr. Simpson—Said I took the law of nature in too large a sense. . . . I suppose I did not; since the ground of appeals is oppression, I am to take it as large as that principle . . . If taken for the principles of reason, I do not think that the law doth bind a man. . . . Said the civil policy bounds the appeal. . . . This is to refer all ecclesiastical power formally into the Synod. . . . Said that it is the most likely way. (2) Better than . . . It is not the likeliest way, for the greatest number is an Ecumenical Council . . . Said the arguments are only negative. . . .

Mr. Goodwin— [A blank space].

Dr. Burges—It is asserted that upon the point the business will be the greatest part of it in the clergy . . . He knows the contrary when ruling elders are joined with it. . . . Reasons against an appeal except to an elective judge. . . . Said not known to those remote . . . The more reason they should meddle with it.

Mr. Seaman—To appeal is nothing else but to call in another for some aid and help. . . . This doth suppose some power, authority, and ability to help, or else you take away the ground of the action whether you call this a moral or political power. . . . Amongst the civilians appellare and querulare are all one, equivocal terms. . . . The Church is the kingdom of Jesus Christ, and kingdom is a political word.

power, and excommunication of a Church. . . . For the word rescinding there may be a double—a declarative and destructive. . . . Here it is only interpretative, not by making it no sentence, but no just sentence. . . . Said to rescind a sentence doth deny that congregation a power to take in that party cut off. . . . Take away the liberty of a congregation in admission of his members. . . . This party is a member of the whole, and so it is not debarred of any right but that by consent given to the whole . . . An argument against a coercive power is to argue against our Assembly, and the ordinance by which we sit. So government, and what government can there be without a coercive power, a power proper to that government? . . . If there be no government, it is not regnum, but tumultus . . . For that of excommunicating a church . . . Said it is morally untrue; it ought not so to be, for so a church should be deprived of ordinances . . . A. I ask them whether they did not in the urging of this argument conceive that our opinion is a sufficient answer. . . . We say none, but the governors are active in this, not the people, as if we hold that every member is equally joined . . . What inconvenience more in excommunicating a whole Church? . . . For that historical truth it hath not been done, that is so much the more for our advantage.

Mr. Calamy—Our brother doth argue thus if after the sentence a man be bound. . . . Then there must be a key to unlock three locks, and that we had need to have authority from Scripture. . . . A. In the Old Testament there was such a key, and in the New Testament it is one of our privileges. . . . By way of retortion, if a man be unjustly excommunicated, I demand what is his misery to have no key. . . . For the coercive power . . . consider it would be hard that the government of Christ should be inferior to the Old Testament, there was a help for it in the Old . . . If none, then no help for a church when it proves heretical. . . . It will appear by the 18th of Math. a pari ratione, if a member be excommunicated for heresy, then a church. . . . Mr. Goodwin—This general answer is given, that the argument is therefore founded wrongly, be[cause] it is an appeal only in the case of an unjust sentence. Whilst there is an appeal, the question is whether this be just or unjust. . . . If it be a mere declaring it to be unjust, I shall not contend. . . . Said there is not a coercive power parallel to that of excommunication. If that may be asserted, my argument also falls if you will hold it out. . . . Take excommunication out of the government, that those Assemblies shall not practise it, and then I am satisfied. . . . Said the elders only are in the fault, and so to be excommunicate. . . . A. It is not in their power alone to receive him, it must be the whole Church. . . . In this way you contend for a power that was never practised, and you say there was no occasion. On a letter from Earl of Manchester,

Sess. 382.—February 17, 1644.—Monday morning.

A letter from the Earl of Manchester.

R.—Mr. Whitchcott be approved for Provost of King's College. SESS. 382.
Feb. 17,
1644.

R.—Mr. Hill for Master of Emmanuel College.

R.—Mr. Spurstow for Master of Clare Hall.

Whitchcott approved for King's College.

Debate on appeals resumed.

Mr. Whitakers—If subordination . . . do not infer a power of rescinding, then the power of a particular congregation is so full as that the sentence is unreversible. . . . There is no such clear institution for an independent congregation to have such a power. . . . This, of all others, needs a most clear institution, because it crosseth the law of nature, and therefore must stand merely upon the institution. . . . Yea, it claims a power more than any classis, provincial or national Assembly. . . . though our brethren have not cleared this institution . . . That which hath neither precept in Scripture nor any practice, and so can have no promise, that is not by institution. . . . That government that carries with it absurdities and inconsistencies, and opens a door to schism and finds no way to shut it . . . it crosseth the nature of government in general as it is now practised. It is no government at all, no more than a painted fire is fire, if two or three join in a body and claim all power. . . . In New England they will not allow any to gather churches without going to the civil magistrate. . . . This crosseth the end of government. . . . Thus the whole body must be joined together, then there must be some ligaments . . . and this was the end why Christ ascended. . . . (3) It crosseth and takes off from the glory of censures ; that that makes the censures ridiculous, and emboldens him to scorn all censures, that is not the way. . . . (4) It opens a way to schisms, and no way to shut them. If it do so, it is a way to be avoided and not countenanced. . . . This may seem to be too heavy a charge. . . . I would know whether they limit the nature of schism to one particular congregation, if so . . . If a man will join to no congregation at all, and condemn all churches, then he is no schismatic. I think him the greatest schismatic. . . . If a man go out of this Church, can they censure him ? . . . An inconsistency with their

SESS. 382. own precepts. . . . In their apology, 24th page, they disclaim
 Feb. 17, all independency. . . . This the most abhorred maxime 1644. that any congregation . . . or to be censurable by them.
 Debate on If they be bound to give an account, then a classis appeals continued. may call them to an account. If censurable by them, then they have power to do it. . . . Strange that God should provide a remedy against offending brother, and not an offending church. . . . If particular churches be bound to associate themselves, and this be a holy and wholesome ordinance of Jesus Christ . . . 54th page of Mr.
 Cotton.¹ . . . Then Christ must give them power to attain those ends. . . . If there be some particular cases wherein the Church's censures are null and void, not bound in heaven, then it is no great power to rescind that sentence.

Mr. Rutherford—When I read through that treatise of the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven,¹ I thought it an easy labour for an universal pacification, he comes so near unto us.

Mr. Herle—I conceive it is a part of our unhappiness when we are upon disputation we fall accommodating, and when accommodating then disputing . . . we have . . . You are now only to prove that be[cause] this proves subordination, it proves also appeals.

Mr. Burroughs—Here are new arguments.

Mr. Seaman—I think that subordination doth in the very nature of the thing prove appeals. Subordination doth prove the liberty of appeals in civil government.

Ordered—Proceed in the debate.

Sess. 383.—February 18, 1644.—Tuesday morning.

The Assembly proceeded to debate the second reason from the light of nature.

Mr. Herle—Said if this be of the law of nature, then it is indispensable and unalterable ; but this is alterable, for in a democracy there is no appeal. I do not see how this hold[s]. It may be in a democracy. . . . Said if this be agreeable to the law of nature, then it must take its rise either from the principia prima or . . . Not from the prima principia . . . I think it may be from these that are primo prima of the highest nature. . . . The government, as laid upon Christ's shoulder, is not laid upon the law of nature, yet there may be something in this government and tending to it that may be of the law of nature. . . . Said this discourse is human, and therefore the argument must be so too. . . .

A. The error is in this. We do not maintain that this government is grounded only upon the discourse of men, but we say this, appeal in this government is grounded upon the light of nature. . . . Said against the nature of excommunication because of the precedaneous consent of the people. . . . A. The precedaneous consent of the people is not causa sine qua non. . . . Whatsoever a thing cannot be without, that must concur to the essence of a thing; but this is extrinsical to the thing, and therefore cannot be of the essence. . . . Said whatsoever is de jure naturæ must be a Deo tanquam author[e] naturæ, but this is not so. . . . Said if agreeable to nature, yet not from the inferior to the superior, but only from one to another . . . Said if from nature, then go no further than nature. . . . A. The natural light in this appeal is in the inferiority and superiority: for men in their generical nature, there is no difference at all. . . . The light in nature is from the generical nature of appeals. The end is relief of wrong.

continued.

Dr. Hoyle—Concerning the jus naturæ, we are not only to consider the natural deduction, but the conditional. A man must defend himself when put to it. . . . If he had read Demosthenes, he would have known that in democracy there is an appeal.

Mr. Seaman—For that of appeals in democracy, I think he means that when you come down to the last concio of the people, from that there is no appeal. . . . In such governments they have divers courts, and from them there is no appeal. . . . It's as if he should say there is no appeal from the supreme judicatory. . . . For that of Frankfurt there was a great contest concerning the power of the officers and people, and never determined, but the Church dissolved in that contest. . . . For that the Scriptures lays the government upon the shoulder of Christ, and founds it upon the incarnation of Christ, and therefore not upon the light of nature. . . . God's will and God's nature, they do not destroy one another. . . . In the incarnation, nature and institution do also agree well together. . . . In no institution did God go against nature, but made His institutions salvâ naturâ.

Mr. Reynolds—Said the precepts of nature are indispensable. . . . A. We do not intend them to be juris naturalis in regard of an obligatory precept, but of a direction. . . . The precepts of nature may not be dispensed with, but the direction may. . . . Said our law condemns without appeal. . . . A. There is something analogous to an appeal in our law. In matters of fact there is no difficulty, but in the judgment of the fact. . . . A man hath liberty to take his exceptions against the jury. . . . Said the government would be merely human if this be admitted. . . . By this argument many theological doctrines will be human too, which must be proved by discourse from principles of reason. . . . Said the people must have an antecedent consent in rescinding of the sentence. . . . This is not yet resolved by any in this Assembly. Yet admit it, consent is involved in the subordination.

Sess. 384.—February 19.—Wednesday morning.

Mr. Thomas Cummins ordered for a Fellow.

Ordered—That no minister do pass this Assembly upon any former certificate, till he have first satisfied the Committee for the examination of ministers of the reason of his remove, to be reported to the Assembly.

Report from the Committee about Synods read and debated. 1st proposition debated.

SESS. 386.
Feb. 21,
1644.

Mr. Sterry, Mr. Foxcraft, Mr. Channell, for the Lords Commons.

A letter from the Hertfordshire ministers read, and the petitions to the Houses.

They were called in, and told they did commiserate their case. But we cannot appear as the body of an Assembly in this business, but particular members of the Assembly shall solicit in their behalf.

Ordered—Mr. Rosewell (?) and Mr. Balson for the north.

Report by Dr. Stanton of the proposition committed to them . . . debated.

Debate on Report as to Synods.

Mr. Seaman—I move it may be waived wholly. I was never satisfied with two etceteras.

Mr. Rutherford—This proposition was drawn up to satisfy, the censure was of all of different judgments. . . . Said the Nonconformists' etcetera could never be understood. . . . A. The particulars in the proposition takes away this, for there is this specification, 'those particular circumstances which are inseparable from the acts of worship, etc.' . . . The proposition only saith they may not impose and command; but there is difference betwixt directing, and imposing, and commanding. . . . Said the places speak not of a Synod. . . . True, but it will prove that they ought to command nothing but that that will tend to decency and edification.

Mr. Buroughes—Said there is no truth in this¹ this proposition, because all the power of governments lies in indifferent things. . . . This, I think, is not good. This hath brought a great mischief. . . . It's honour enough to governors that they have power to look to worship of God, that it be observed according to the mind of Christ.

Dr. Hoyle . . .

Dr. Temple—In this proposition, some things in it upon which we may waive the proposition. You will find it a great debate, whether there be not some authority to determining² things ad unum in things indifferent. . . . The

² Sic in MS. for 'determine.'

SESS. 386. affirmative in the proposition is not so large as the negative
 Feb. 21, is. Some things they may not enjoin, and others you say 1644. they may declare.

Mr. Wilson . . .

Mr. Herle—I would have this waived . . . All that you have to do is included in the negative. Here is either an etcetera or an imperfection. . . . They were to bring in what Synods may do, and they tell us what they may not do.

Dr. Burges—I am of the same opinion. It will be better to waive this proposition.

Mr. Price—I subscribe to their opinion, be[cause] one part of this proposition is opposite to the other.

Mr. Seaman—I humbly and ingenuously give you an account of the meaning of this proposition. . . . I was always cast behind rocks. . . . All authors do grant this doctrinal proposition, that there is a power somewhere to regulate those things indifferent which the Nonconformists express to be time and place, etcetera, or such like; and so it is here.

Mr. Hill—Not only myself but many others are engaged for the truth of this proposition. . . . Said then we must bid farewell to all policy. Their power is to order as far as the word of God doth. . . . Necessary things we may command . . . Expediency we may advise . . . Indifferencies we must leave at liberty . . . as, for instance, preaching in a gown or cloak . . . I think it seasonable . . . If power in Synods to command indifferent things, and judge what is indifferent; and then what shall we come unto?

Dr. Temple—For his own instance of a cloak or gown . . . Suppose it come to this, the congregation is divided, one will have it in a cloak. . . . If no power to determine this, I desire to know what is to be done.

Mr. Hill—I think here is a confusion of things expedient and purely indifferent.

Mr. Rutherford—Loath to propound any arguments if I thought this proposition would entangle the Assembly. . . . I thought it would have passed with the liking of all. . . . All the ceremonies intruded upon the consciences of the people were intruded under this notion, the church may command in those things indifferent. . . . Where there are conveniences to ground a determination upon, that will warrant the de[te]rmining it. . . . But if there be no necessity or conveniency, then it is purely indifferent. . . . Said who shall judge of the expediency or indifference. A. The word of God is so perfect as that it shows what is necessary and expedient, hic and nunc, and what indifferent.

SESS. 386.
Feb. 21,
1644.

Mr. Scaman—The reverend brother drives things somewhat low. He saith there is . . .

Mr. Buroughs—The case is only in this when themselves declare it to be indifferent, and that hic and nunc, yet they will impose it.

Mr. Herle—I think this distinction of necessary, expedient, and indifferent, will entangle you. . . . The question in the Bishops was whether that the command of the Church did not make thing[s] indifferent to become necessary. . . . But we do not say this doth make it . . . but only declares a thing that in his nature is indifferent, yet in its use it is expedient.

Sess. 387.—February 24, 1644.—Monday morning.

Dr. Burges moved the Assembly from the Lord Mayor about a letter from a grave divine of the Assembly concerning the Uxbridge treaty. He thinks many passages in it tend to sedition; but because there is the name of a divine of the Assembly, and he would first acquaint the Assembly with it if any of the Assembly will own it . . . If not, then he shall take a course to find out the author, and to vindicate the Assembly and do justice.

Complaint as to letter by a divine of the Assembly.

R.—The Assembly doth disclaim this letter.

Ordered—Dr. Burges, Mr. Arrowsmith, Mr. Calamy to acquaint the Lord Mayor with this, and to give him thanks for his great respect showed unto this Assembly.

Protestation was read.

Debate of the 3d proposition. ‘Synodical Assemblies may excommunicate.’

Mr. Goodwin—If they may excommunicate, they may excommunicate a church.

[sic.]

Ordered—That the scribes take care of the printing of the Ordinance of Parliament for the taking the Directory for worship, and that they do appoint who shall print it.

Ordered—To proceed in the debate where we left.

Ordered—Mr. Bine approved for Fellow.

Sess. 389.—March 1.

To pray.

Mr. Greenhill, Mr. Good, Mr. Ward.

Ordered—Mr. Holcroft approved for Fellow.

Upon a debate about the order of printing the Directory, it was concluded that it was ordered the day before.

Dr. Temple, Mr. Marshall, Dr. Burges, Mr Herle, a Committee to draw up something to be humbly presented to both Houses of Parliament, to preserve the sacraments pure.

Sess. 390.—March 3, 1644.—Monday morning.

Ordered—The scribes shall inquire of a fit man to be the doorkeeper, in the room of Mr Frame (?), and present one to the Assembly to be approved of for that service.

Debate on power of Synods
resumed.

Debate upon the reason to prove the proposition.

Mr. Marshall—From the parity of reason.

Mr. Marshall—I think this argument will not do it, for a man may find a distinction of binding by doctrine and censure. . . . The thing to be proved is that a Synodical Assembly is a ministerial Church.

Mr. Herle—I think there is such a distinction as that the one doth imply the other ; that if it have power to bind by doctrine, it must have the other. . . . Said this is not a church. . . . They are a body, whereof Christ is the head, and have right to ordinances, and power to make decrees ; and therefore a church.

Mr. Ny—Why should not the formality of a church be as well gathering together in the name of Christ as binding and loosing? . . . I say they have not power of all ordinances . . . else you must make two sorts of churches—one sort capable of all ordinances, and another not capable; and then you must show us that distinction.

Mr. Herle—He should have taken notice of the argument. . . . It's proved to be an assembly for government, and power to make decrees, and therefore must have power to back them. . . . Why may they not have all ordinances? . . . Said they have not constantly those, neither hath a congregation all those.

Mr. Coleman—The meeting of the officers in the church of the Jews is called the Church. . . . Scriptures to prove meeting of officers to be a church: 27 Numb., 5 Prov. 14 for illustration; 1 Kings, 12, 20, 35 Numb. 12, 24. Unto this doth Christ allude in 18th of Math.

Mr. Herle—That power must be either in a synod or congregation, and in some cases cannot be in a congregation . . . that in some cases must be in a synod.

Mr. Vines—I desire to make a motion. . . . You have ordered appeals. . . . This form must be pursued as well in synods and classes—say, then, as classis and synod.

R.—Proceed in the debate to-morrow morning.

Sess. 391.—March 4.

Report of the title for the Directory.

Ordered—Dr. Temple, Mr. Spurstow, Mr. Chambers, Mr. Gataker, Mr. Seaman, Mr. Coleman, Mr. Carrell, to be a Committee to think of fit men to be employed in the translating of the Directory into Welsh, to make report to the Assembly.

Ordered—Dr. Stanton, Mr. Delaplace, Mr. Tuckney, Mr. Hill, Mr. Arrowsmith, Mr. Whitakers, added to the Committee for the title, and the title recommitted.

Ordered—The Committee, for answer to the reasons of the dissenting brethren about subordination of Assemblies, are to meet forthwith.

Ordered—Mr. Sedgwicke, Mr. Strickland, to go and visit Mr. Assessor White, in the name of this Assembly.

Mr. Ny brought in certain propositions, which conduce to the settling of your congregations.

They were read by Mr. Ny.

Mr. Scaman—If they bring in those propositions, with their prefaces (?) annexed, we shall receive them.

Mr. Rutherford—Those propositions concern Church government in general. . . . If you create new debates, you will be longer than you have been already.

Mr. Marshall—So far as I can remember what he had, they may be brought to two heads. . . . Some concern Church government general, and some particular congregations. . . . The first run upon this a jus divinum of a platform, and of the particular officers. . . . Concerning this, by a vote in the Assembly you did lay aside the disputing of that point, whether a perfect platform of government. . . . And for the jus divinum, you have been careful to go this way not to seek for a divine institution. It's contrary to the whole way you have gone, and to the intent and purpose of the Parliament. . . . For that concerning particular congregations. . . . I thought they would have pitched upon something concerning the moulding of Assemblies rather than the point of excommunication. There is something sent up by way of accommodation and ordination's passed too. . . . If they will give any proposition tending to the constraining (?) of congregations in their numbers, this will be of great use.

Mr. Ny—I think there is a mistake of our intentions in this. There was a necessity for us to do it to discharge our consciences. . . . We are called to this work, and you must give us leave to make our own consciences the rule. . . . For that of calling back that again rejected or concluded, that was said before. . . . All those propositions appertain to particular congregations. They are natural to it. . . . And they do not transgress upon the accommodation sent up. . . . We conceive, in the forming of a congregation, it will conduce much to the members to know that it is the authority of Jesus Christ. . . . For the constitution of churches, we know not whether it be committed to you.

Mr. Seaman—None of all this was committed to them, or desired of them.

Mr. Henderson—I desire the Assembly would enter upon that which is yet to be done, and necessary to be done.

Mr. Herle—It is in your choice where you will begin. You may begin at the 7th, the latter part.

Mr. Newcomen—If you accept of any of those propositions, you hinder the last you have done already.

Mr. Carter—I offer one word concerning the jus divinum; if there be a jus divinum, this will be an addition worth the while.

Mr. Marshall—True, we had need to underlay it well. If we let it go up under this notion as agreeable to the word, is it not sufficient?

¹ This paper was presented to the Houses of Parliament as well as to the Assembly, and is here given from the Journals of the House of Lords :—

'The return of our brethren from the late General Assembly of the Kirk of Scotland hath occasioned us to desire the meeting of this honourable and reverend Committee at this time, that we might make known unto them, and by them to the honourable Houses of Parliament and the reverend Assembly of Divines, that the Directory for the Public Worship of God, and the propositions concerning Kirk Government and Ordination agreed upon by both Houses according to the advice of the Assembly of Divines, was not only acceptable to the General Assembly of the Kirk of Scotland, and to the Parliament of that kingdom, but was also received of them as a matter of thanksgiving unto God, who had so far promoted his own work of refreshment unto themselves in this time of their trouble, and of encouragement in their constant assistance by their joint prayers, counsels, and forces, till, by the blessing of God, the work be finished, and this kingdom settled in peace.

'And that, from their zeal to uniformity according to the Covenant, having parted with some lawful customs universally practised in that Kirk ever since the first Reformation of religion, they, by their several acts and authority respectively, have ordained the Directory to be forthwith printed, and thereafter to be observed in all the kirks of the kingdom, and in the armies.

'That they have also agreed unto and approved of the aforementioned propositions, as a ground-work of the intended Uniformity in Kirk Government, according to the Covenant.

'And that their earnest and incessant desire is, that the Directory for Public Worship, which, after so long time and so much travell, is at last brought to a final conclusion by the Assemblies and Parliaments of both kingdoms, may be presently put in execution in all the parts thereof; and that neither ministers nor people, of whatsoever quality or degree, be permitted to preach or write against it, or to practise that which by public authority is abolished, which, beside the dishonour done to the name of God, and provoking of His displeasure, would prove nothing else but a contempt of order and authority, a real proclamation of liberty, a destroying of that which hath been in building, and a frustrating of all future endeavours for reformation.

‘And it is with no less zeal and earnestness desired and expected by that whole Kirk and kingdom, that the remanent parts of Uniformity be expedited, especially that the materials of Kirk Government, which hath been so long in the hands of the Assembly of Divines, may be formed into a practical Directory with all possible diligence, which, beside the Uniformity longed for by all the Reformed Kirks, especially by the Kirk of Scotland, will be a hedge and fence to the Directory of Worship, a mean to procure ready obedience to the ordinances of Parliament, a settling of the minds of such as are hovering and halting betwixt two opinions, a remedy of many doubts and jealousies, a preservative against errors and schisms, a terror and matter of despair to the common enemy, and a mighty confirmation of the hearts of the godly in their adventuring and undertaking for defence of religion and order of the Kirk once established, and of that power without which religion can neither be reformed nor preserved.

‘We therefore, according to the commandment which we have received, and the great trust put upon us, do move and entreat that this honourable and reverend Committee may be pleased to represent to the honourable Houses and reverend Assembly, that acceptation, and these desires of the Parliament of Scotland, and the National Assembly of that Kirk, that in their wisdom, the best and readiest ways may be found out and prescribed, for bringing matters so necessary, after so long deliberation, to a wished conclusion; and we may have their answer, to be sent to the Committees of the Parliament and Assembly in Scotland, for our exoneration and their satisfaction. What we have moved concerning the Directories for Public Worship and Kirk Government, we desire may be extended to the Church and kingdom of Ireland.’—Journals of House of Lords, vol. vii. pp. 317, 318.

Mr. Goodwin—Would you have the man to be without ordinances all his days. If you cannot excommunicate him, you cannot keep him without ordinances.

Mr. Palmer—

Mr. Gillespy—There is no necessity of living without ordinances all his days. He may see his error, so the necessity is not absolutely. . . . He must have the ordinances, but how? In a lawful way. He must not do evil that good may come of it. Separation is an unlawful way, etc. . . . They will insist upon that, he is persuaded it's unlawful. The argument will resolve upon this. Upon this corrupt principle I must rather do that which is in itself a sin, than do that which appears to be a sin.

gathering of churches
continued.

The dissenting brethren coming in, it was debated.

Dr. Gouge—This is an argument that any heretic or schismatic may use.

Mr. Case—Said if he can, with a good conscience, gather churches in a congregational . . . True, it is unlawful to him to join ; but the question is not what is unlawful to him, but what is unlawful in itself.

Dr. Temple—That which is an erroneous conscience is not a good conscience.

Mr. Burroughs—No heretic can say he can do it with a good conscience. . . . Suppose the Presbyterial government lawful, yet if another be lawful too, and I cannot be convinced. . . .

Mr. Gillespy—That supposition being laid, destroys the argument. The conscience is erroneous that judgeth it unlawful . . . so that it resolves into the binding power of an erroneous conscience. . . . It is a common maxim conscientia errans ligat non obligat . . . This makes the conscience obligare to the positive duty of gathering churches into an independent form of government.

Mr. Burroughs—I do not aim at any strength for the bond for erring conscience. . . . When I see 2 things, though both lawful, yet if I see the one to be more apparently lawful, I may choose that. . . . Suppose a man do doubt whether it be lawful to eat flesh, I appeal whether it be a sin to eat herbs.

Mr. Marshall— . . . Our question is not of the joining . . . but the gathering of such churches out of churches under a Presbyterial government.

Dr. Burges—He illustrates his argument by an instance of eating flesh and herbs. . . . It is one thing to consider of things that are neither commanded nor forbidden . . . and another to speak of things commanded and forbidden.

Dr. Temple—This is the thing to be proved, that they cannot join with the Presbyterial government and unlawful . . . and that without all doubt that indep[en]dent form is unlawful.

Mr. Marshall—Said in that comparison, suppose a sheep must starve if he come into that pasture again. . . . Therefore saith he, the Lord would have churches, to give leave to them to join with such churches. . . . This will follow, if in churches of a classical government any be scrupled, they ought to give leave . . . by the same rule, in the independent way any scruple, they must give them leave to join with the Brownists, and the Brownists with the Anabaptists.

Mr. Burroughs—Answer very briefly. . . . This will very well hold if 2 before me, and this I think lawful, and another government is lawful too. . . . I think I were bound to let him go if I did think that government lawful. . . . If the Church is bound in such a case to let members go, then gathering is lawful.

Mr. Burroughs—I cannot see by the words of the proposition how you will be able to justify practices in England which you all grant. Suppose a man be for some time from home, he must ordinarily. . . .

Mr. Marshall—I am persuaded of the truth of the proposition. He that is a church member in a place, and ordinarily goes for his food in another place when he may at home, doth transgress from the rule, but it would be unseasonable.

Mr. Ley—I think the season is very fit, and the way will carry great force with it. Many straggle from their pastors be[cause] they are orthodox.

Mr. Scaman— . . . How far we shall prevail in it I know not ; but yet let us exonerate our consciences. . . . I think it is a seasonable and necessary truth.

Mr. Whitaker—Said it is true and expedient, and that expediency is so great, as that in a degree of necessity, be[cause] of that of the seekers, they take themselves to be above ordinances : they will not go to hear at all.

Mr. Herle—I question the truth of the proposition in the bi—

Mr. Marshall—Said if there be a concurrence in the truth, order it, and then debate the expediency of it. This is a strange course to me. If it be inexpedient for us to give up our advice of it to the Parliament, shall we go to debate the truth of it.

Mr. Ny—I think there was a mistake. . . . I think you have not voted your former propositions as seasonable to be sent up.

Mr. Palmer—To grant that liberty is to destroy all congregations ; as you will not grant that liberty, you must hold it out. . . . It is so absolutely and essentially necessary

Report from Committee on Catechism.

Mr. Rutherford— . . . I would not have those questions to be cardinal and principal questions, but printed in a smaller letter . . . Said the apostles did not use such a way. I think they did use it: 'Is then the law of God of none effect?' . . . The answer is easy to it. . . . It should be in Debate on Report as to method of catechizing.

the plainest and easiest way. It is a feeding of the lambs. . . . Said it takes away the proper work of the minister. There is as much art in catechising as in anything in the world. It may be doubted whether every minister do understand the most dexterous way of doing it.

Mr. Marshall—I confess the pains which that brother that brought in the report is both accepted with God and hath been blessed by Him. . . . But I crave leave to give a few dissenting thoughts to the method propounded. . . . Said people will come to learn things by rote, and can answer it as a parrot, but not understand the thing. True, I think it a good way to be so done in the catechiser, but put it into the catechism, and it produceth no other effect but what the proposition doth. He got that by heart as he doth the other. . . . I think if you could set down questions in propositions, this will not do the deed ; but let it be the care of godly ministers to try all ways. . . . I like it well, that in your preface you should commend all this. . . . I think you do not intend to tie them to those words, and no other. Let your Catechism be as the Directory : ‘ those, or to that effect.’

Mr. Bridge—I conceive there are two ends of catechism : (1.) Increase of knowledge ; (2.) To give you some test of their knowledge. For the first there should be an explication of the terms of divinity : the terms of redemption and sanctification must be first explained. 2. The matter should run both affirmatively and negatively. . . . For the test of their knowledge it is better that answers should be made by sentences than by aye and no. Not amiss to have such an expression as this, that you intend not only the words, but to express the sense.

Mr. Gillespy—This is a profitable discourse, which is the best way of catechising. . . . I like well the form offered to you, the capital questions by themselves, and particular questions by aye and no, both put together in the body of the Catechism. . . . When we were lately in Scotland, in conference, we had occasion to speak of this way, and showed them the example of it, and they all liked it very well. . . . For the objections made against it. . . . For the Directory. . . . It never entered into the thoughts of any to tie to the words and syllables in that Catechism, as in the Directory of preaching. You may use the words in the preface as in the Directory for preaching. . . . Many need no help in that kind, yet many do ; and though no ministers to¹ need help, yet masters of families may need it. . . . For that, 'the formality of the thing,' the same formality and inconvenience is in both.—A. The same inconvenience is not. There may be a degenerating of the best thing into formality. . . . But this will not so soon degenerate into formality as the other, where there is both general and particular answers, that must needs inculcate more knowledge than one of them alone. . . . For that other way, it may suffice to recommend it in a preface. I offer this, longum iter per precepta. . . . It will be easier to set down an example. . . . I offer this reason for the thing. . . . The light of nature and natural reason leads men this way in the explanation of things. . . . As in disputing to go upon induction of particulars, if scholars have need of light in this kind. . . . So in Scripture questions.

continued.

Dr. Gouge—There is a difference, when one thing is in question to enlarge that, and to enlarge every point in religion. . . . Ministers are physicians : they must observe the patient.

Mr. Herle—I would have aye and no to be expressed, but not distinct. It should be the first word of the answer.

Mr. Seaman—There are two distinct things before us : about a catechism, and about catechising. . . . The Catechism is a Directory, both to the catechiser and the child. . . . For the minister, it is a little too much to prescribe to him in this form or that form. . . . The greatest care should be taken for the answer, and yet² to be formed, not to the model of knowledge that the child hath, but to that the child ought to have. . . . I desire you would make those two distinct.

Mr. Reynolds—We all agree that way which is most for ingenerating knowledge is most to be used. . . . But that this way before you is the best way, I cannot discern.

² Or yt for that.

 May 13, those ayes or noes be of use. . . . You will obtain your end 1645. as well by setting it down in the preface to the Catechism.

Mr. Delmy—In this matter we are to consider the nature of a catechism, the propounding of doctrine in the most familiar manner. . . . That manner which answers most to this is best, that which brings and conveys the knowledge of religion. . . . We must consider the choice ends of catechism: to inquire into the measure of the knowledge of the party. . . . The experience of the Reformed churches is to be considered.

Mr. Palmer—If I had not a peculiar interest in this I should have spoken more. . . . Something I am unsatisfied in. . . . Much is spoken of children, but we have some others to deal withal than children.

Lord
 Loudon takes leave of the Assembly.

The Lord Loudon appeared in the Assembly to take his leave of them, being to go into Scotland. He signified that there would be a Parliament the 8th of the next month, and therefore desired that the Assembly would hasten their advice, to be transmitted to the Parliament, which would be acceptable news to their Parliament, if they could but hear that it were out of our hands.

The Prolocutor, in the name and by order of the Assembly, gave him thanks for his pains for the good of both kingdoms and the Church, and promised the prayers of the Assembly for his safe return.

Draught of Government
delivered.

¹ 'The House being informed that some of the Assembly of Divines were at the door,

'They were called in, and Mr. Marshall acquainted the House, That whereas the House had been pleased, at several times, to order the Assembly of Divines to send to them such propositions as they had finished ; which they had done ; that there are some more which needed some proofs out of Scripture, and had been under debate with them and were now finished : They had cast their votes into a model and method ; and now the House may see all before them. They have left out the proofs, both of Scripture and reason, having sent them in with their former votes ; but if the House please to command the Assembly to give in the proofs, they are ready to do it. Some of these votes are plainly held out by Scripture ; others have reasons agreeable to Scripture, and have been alleged : And such as have the light of nature are received and practised in all Reformed Churches. This work, though it appears short, yet hath spent much time, by reason of dissenting judgments ; that, if possible, they might be satisfied. To this short paper of additional votes they have given in the proofs out of Scripture ; and if those proofs, at the first reading, be not convictive, in regard that God hath not laid down the points of Church discipline in such clear texts ; they desire they may not be laid aside, but that the House will command them to give in the proofs at large.'—Journals of House of Commons, vol. iv. p. 199.

Take it up . . . willingly and obediently. . . . I have singled out the article of self-denial. Consider what is meant by denying, and what by a man's self-denying. The original word is emphatical—to deny thoroughly and totally. Let him, as it were, cast himself off. It is a law word—a thrusting off a graceless child. . . . A man's self. Man is taken chiefly in these 3 ways:—originally as he comes from Adam, . . . naturally as created by God . . . graciously as renewed by God . . . A man's sinful self, and so it is to deny ungodliness and sinful work . . . A man's natural self either in regard of being or well-being. This last to 3 heads : 1. External relations . . . 2. Special gifts and endowments . . . 3. Common ends which men naturally propose to themselves to pursue . . . To these may be reduced . . . A man's renewed self, his gracious self, as the lusts of our corrupt nature are the members of the old man, so the graces of the spirit of the new man . . . 3 branches of this duty of self-denial . . . 1. Some things to be denied simply and absolutely, so our sinful self, two manner of ways . . . 1. Generally as it importeth the whole body of concupiscence revenge the blood of Jesus Christ upon our own corruption. Herein required a continual actual exercise of our grace, be[cause] things that are natural will return unto the strength again if not weakened¹ over, as a stone and water . . . 2. Specially in regard of our individual and more personal corruptions xviii. Psalm 23 . . . As the juice and sap of the earth is the fomes and matter of all fruit, yet in one field it will take better to wheat and in another to barley. . . . Hence in the Scripture mention of national sins . . . and personal sins the pride of Pharaoh. . . . By this sin it is that particular persons do most of all dishonour God, resist the grace of God, defile their own consciences. This makes the greatest struggling in conversion, and therefore in repentance. Though it drive away all sins, yet this sin above others is singled out. [2] For our natural self, to deny that hypothetically and with condition when God calls us to it. [1] God doth never call us to deny ourselves whole and wholly. We are allowed to seek ourselves and salvation. . . . 2. Neither doth He call us to any morose and superstitious self-denial—not to enjoy the things that God gives . . . Superstitions like that of Baal's priests and that of the Flagellantes. A story of this in the fourth part of the Warfare² to show to what sordidness the superstitious devotion of that Church doth carry men unto. . . . God calls when anything that is dear and near to us stands in opposition to Christ . . . and in this we are always to deny ourselves in preparation of heart and actually when . . . As Paul, Acts xx. 24, xxi. 13. Michaiah did not regard his own safety, 1 King. xxii. 14. Nor Levi regard his father and mother, xxxiii. Deut. 9. Ezekiel xxiv. 16. Nor Matthew the gain of his custom. . . . In this case we are to deny ourselves 2 ways: 1. When anything is a snare unto us, either a fruit of sin, or temptation to sin . . . xiii. Deut.

To deny them as oblations when Christ calls them to be dedicated to him—when Abraham was called from his own country, Daniel to be cast into the den, Moses, the disciples, Paul—none of those do consult with flesh and blood. . . . All that we are and have is upon those conditions,—to use them to His honour, and part with them when called for. . . . 3. Our renewed self—our virtues and graces in some sense to be denied comparatively with respect to salvation. . . . In the nature of duties we are to prize them ; but in the notion of the covenant of life, we must esteem them as loss for the . . . To hang the weight of a soul upon anything that hath imperfection is dangerous. . . . Nothing we are to call our righteousness but the Lord our righteousness. . . . Faith justifies, as a window is said to enlighten the room, because it is most apt to let in that light which comes from another body. . . . Application : [As] when Christ did preach His sermon to His disciples, viii. Mark, 34 . . . it shall be double. In the general relation as the people of Christ and as ministers of Christ. As people of Christ : 1. Take heed of that sin which is most formally opposite to self-denial ; self-love, a comprehensive sin, a seminal sin, at the root of every sin. The apostle puts it as the commander, in describing a whole regiment of sins. . . . 2. Great branches : self-seeking as the end, and self-depend[ing] as the means to that end . . . Self-seeking wholly taken up in serving yourselves . . . ii. Phil. 21. When men are like to the prophet's vine, x. Hos., this is the greatest self-hatred in the world. . . . Order our love in proportion to our life. Whence we derive our life we should turn all our love . . . Self-depend[ing] when we do put confidence in our own graces, or in men, strength, horses, and chariots . . . This is a great sin . . . injurious to the attributes of God, His wisdom, goodness, etc. Our confidence should be in those—those are unmov[able]. . . . 2. Let us be exhorted to the practice of this duty. 1. Let us exalt the word of God and counsel of God. Let the wisdom of our

God prevail, Pro. xxiii. 4. 2. Exalt the authority of God in all our wills and affections. If a man can but deny his own will. . . . 3. Exalt the honour of God in all our own aims and designs, 2 Sam. xv. 25 . . . 4. Set up the love of Christ and His Church uppermost in our hearts. This will constrain us and make us willing, teach us to say as Esther, cry down all private interests, and make us to say as Elisha to Gehazi, or as Jeremiah to Baruch. . . . 2. Encouragements in the text to this duty: 1. It enables us to take up the cross. It is both a step to it and a means too. The less we value ourselves, the less we shall be troubled with the cross. 2. It will enable us to follow Christ: what Christ commands us to do He doth enable us to do by following His example. Self-seeking ever proceeds from lowliness¹ of mind. . . . Amongst the creatures, those that live only to themselves, they are either base or wild; but the noblest creatures, they have spheres of activity. . . . God hath planted a natural self-denial in every creature: moral self-denial in heathen. . . . But we are never enough out of ourselves till Christ have divided all our spoils. . . . 2. To us as ministers the disciples of Christ. . . . 1. That we would be ordered to pray for. 2. To practice this. 1. To pray for it. Nothing more dangerous to a Church and State than self-seeking, one which² in a . . . one string in an instrument and spoil. . . . Private interests ever be obstructing necessary duties. This made Pharaoh oppress Israel, Jeroboam set up his calves, Jews crucify Christ, Demetrius . . . As little ditches being joined to the side of a river, draw it out of its own channel. . . . 2. Self-denial is a most admirable preparation to all public employments. . . . What God offered Moses in destroying Israel, and to make of him a great nation, Moses does not have . . . So Joshua divides to the tribes, and had no portion till afterwards for himself. . . . xix. Jos. 48 . . . v. Neh. 14. . . . How low was Paul in his own eyes. . . . Before we use great timber in building, or bricks, we fit them for building, that the self-moisture may be drawn out, that it may not warp in the building. . . . High buildings laid in low foundations,

I doubt not but there will be further light to the predictions of the prophets ; but in truths doctrinal, and especially evangelical, to cry up new lights, and astonish the people with metaphysical fancies, is to introduce scepticism into the Church of Christ. Let our ministerial prudence and zeal teach us to deny all pride and wantonness of wit, . . . and content ourselves with the words of truth and soberness. 2. After a great many years' captivity, God looks upon His people with mercy, and brings back His people, sets them upon building of His temple. . . . The work is interrupted, and after some years God stirs up the spirits of His prophets. . . . Zachariah, in a vision, encourageth his people to go on in the work. The glory of his temple inferior to Solomon's, as appears by the mourning (?) of those. . . . The priesthood was contemptible. . . . Through their frailties and weaknesses (?) they did deserve from God reproach and contempt. . . . To remedy all this, God represents in the I v[er]se]. . . . Christ interposes and rebukes Satan, and acknowledgeth that His power had rescued Joshua and the priests as a brand plucked out of the fire. . . . Here comes in the free grace of Christ that pardons and takes away the filthy garments, and gives him glorious garments. Here is something to recover the honour of the priesthood, but that all this might not be abused, here is a solemn protestation. In these words we have what it is that God requires as a duty, and what He doth encourage them withal upon that condition what God stands upon. It is purely¹ (?) authoritative and majestic. . . . And it is a kind of an oath to Joshua. He would employ him and entrust him. . . . This very much belongs to us. . . . We have seen though not all those things every way parallel. The word of God hath that that no story can reach. We have been recovered out of Babylon. We are a second time upon a Reformation. We have seen our forefathers cast out and made base before all the people. . . . We are men wondered at . . . and have Satan and Satan's instruments to accuse us. But in Christ we trust to appear clothed with His robes. Therefore He protests the same thing to us that to Joshua and his fellows. This is my faith if God give us this grace to fulfil this charge. He will He² make good the same to us. . . . There are some under the New Testament that are to judge them that are within—some to be governments—and if we be not amongst the number of those men it were strange. . . . of the straits of time to speak something by way of exhortation and consolation. . . . 1. What God would have us do. Be ruled by Him in the generality of our conversation, and particularly of our car[ri]age. 2. Consider that here is something that concerns us as Christians, and that that is to be reduced to our office. . . . In the first only remember you. . . . 1. Negatively. Not to follow the ways of our own hearts or the sight of our own eyes, xi. Eccl., lvii. Esa. Those whom God smites, they sometimes go on frowardly in the ways of their own hearts. The following of Christ is the way we should walk in, i. Tim. 6. A charge as we are ministers to take heed of the love of money. . . . 2 Tim. ii. . . . We are to have our eye so upon the will and word of God as thereby to choose our way. . . . 1. Take heed of the ways of covetousness, that we be not of the number of those that devour widows' houses . . . that by engaging ourselves in the businesses of the world we negl[ect] our duty . . . that we do not sell the souls of the people for gain. . . . 2. Take heed of the ways of ambition, drawing disciples after us, following our own opinions and conceits, . . . pride : now reason to take heed of it when such jealousies are cast upon us. . . . Take heed of that ambition whereby we would think to rule and sway all. . . . 3. Take heed of ways of pleasure, idleness, wantonness, and lasciviousness, false prophets—they followed the lusts of uncleanness. . . . Avoid all the appearances of evil, whatsoever might give the least shadow of any offence. . . . 2. Positively walk in the ways of God ; give good example ; be as the salt to season the people of God, and not be unsavoury. . . . Every minister of God is a captain, and he must lead. . . . iii. Phil. 17, 20. . . . We shall never answer it to God if we be not patterns. 2. Keep my charge, a remembrance of what we must do in our office—particularly we must teach and look diligently, that everything be according to the will of God. . . . Keep the charge of God in the administration of all things according to the necessity of the souls of the people. Take heed of force and cruelty . . . and strengthen the diseased, heal the sick, seek that which is lost. Keep the charge of God in our doctrine

. . . not to please men, i. Gal. 10, and yet becoming all things to all men, 1 Cor. 9 . . . and yet with all meekness, instructing those that oppose, and restoring those that are fallen through infirmity. All this is specially the charge which we are to keep, and all this with prayers for the flock. . . . There is something that we are to consider, as especially employed in this great service . . . with all diligence attending upon it as the greatest work, one of them, ever put into the hands of any . . . affording our presence our attention and intention. . . . Many things may persuade us . . . Remember how God hath cast off those that were before us, and so God might upbraid, as Jeroboam, who did worse than Solomon. . . . 2. We are to consider how great a God it is whose charge we are to keep. . . . 3. Consider what it is for ; what doth it tend to? Immediately to the saving of many thousand souls. . . . If we have not more zeal, humility, diligence, meekness of spirit, how shall we be able to answer for it to God? . . . That God should single us out . . . let us reflect upon ourselves. . . . Remember how true many of those confessions, acknowledgments, have been concerning us. . . . If we find that the work of God stops and goes not on . . . if there be any danger or likelihood that we shall not be employed, is not God just in this? . . . Look forward and consider how God protests . . . This is the awakening of us to consider while yet it is time. Bethink what we must resolve. . . . Resolve to walk in God's ways and keep His charge. If we do resolve this and begin with our diligence, here we have a fair encouragement. . . . But otherwise, can we expect that shall be anywhere at any . . . If now we are afraid of men, and will comply with men and drive designs, there will be the same hazards ; there are temptations in every condition. . . . If we here be unprofitable, and have a name of being employed in God's work and do Him no service. . . . 2. The comfortable part of it . . . Here is the encouragement that God gives to His servants. If we either consider the ability of God or His willingness, we may be strengthened that this in due time shall be fulfilled to us. . . . 1. How able is God to do it. . . . What can

This is the foundation we go upon. It is the will of God that His house should be so judged and so kept. 2. As it is the command of God, so that by which the kingdom of Christ shall be set up; and hath not God sworn to set up the kingdom of Christ, and engaged His zeal to do it? 3. It concerns the souls of thousands—thousands that yet remain in extreme darkness in regard of ignorance and profaneness; and can it be imagined a disgraced and discontinued ministry that hath not the power of Christ put into their hands shall do the work to gain so many souls? . . . In all ages of the Church, was there not either miracles or persecutions, or the power of them that are in authority to bring men unto Christ? . . . 4. To pray.

Sess. 519.—October 17, 1645.—Friday morning.

Mr. Seaman, Mr. Thorowgood, Mr. Reynolds.

An order for Mr. Bridges.

Ordered—This order be communicated to the Chairman of the Committee of Examinations to inquire of them concerning the charge against Mr. Bridges in their Committee.

Reports from first and second Committees.

Report from the first Committee concerning Predestination.

Report from the second Committee concerning the Covenants.

Report
concerning predestina-tion debated.

Debate upon the report of the first Committee concerning Predestination.

Debate about those words, 'unto everlasting glory,' whether they be not superfluous.

Sess. 520.—Oct. 20, 1645.—Monday morning.

Dr. Temple made report concerning Mr. Bridges; the Committee was not satisfied concerning him; they had ordered the clerk to bring a note of what was done.

Ordered—That Mr. Bridges' examination be respited till the Assembly be further satisfied.

Debate
resumed.

Proceed in the debate about permission of man's fall; about 'the same decree.'

Mr. Rutherford . . .

Mr. Seaman—If those words 'in the same decree' be left out, will involve us in a great debate.

Mr. Rutherford—All agree in this, that God decrees the end and means, but whether in one or more decrees is not . . . Say God also hath decreed . . . It is very probable but one decree, but whether fit to express it in a Confession of Faith . . .

Mr. Seaman . . .

Mr. Rutherford—If there can be any argument to prove a necessity of one and the same decree, we would be glad to hear it.

Mr. Whitakers—If you take the same decree in reference to time, they are all simul and semel: in eterno there is not prius and posterius.

Dr. Gouge—I do not see how the leaving out of those words will cross that we aim at; I think it will go on roundly without it.

SESS. 520.
Oct. 20,
1645.

Mr. Whitakers—Our conceptions are very various about the decrees, but I know not why we should not say it.

Mr. Scaman—All the odious doctrine of Arminians is from their distinguishing of the decrees, but our divines say they are one and the same decree.

Mr. Gillespie—When that word is left out, is it not a truth, and so every one may enjoy his own sense.

Gillespie desires every one may enjoy his own sense.

Mr. Reynolds—Let not us put in disputes and scholastical things into a Confession of Faith; I think they are different decrees in our manner of conceptions.

Mr. Scaman—You know how great a censure the Remonstrants lie under for making 2 decrees concerning election, and will it not be more concerning the end and means?

Mr. Calamy—That it may be a truth, I think in our Prolocutor's book he gives a great deal of reason for it; but why should we put it in a Confession of Faith?

Mr. Calamy—I question that 'to bring this to pass;' we assert massa pura in this . . . I desire that nothing may be put in one way or other; it makes the fall of man to be medium executionis decreti.

Mr. Palmer—You will be in a worse snare in leaving it out.

Mr. Woodcocke—I desire to know whether this be meant of the decree or the execution of it.

Mr. Gillespie—Say, 'For the same end God hath ordained to permit man to fall.' . . . This shows that in ordine naturæ God ordaining man to glory goes before His ordaining to permit man to fall.

Sess. 521.—October 21, 1645.—Tuesday morning.

Report made from the first Committee sitting before the Assembly.

Report
concerning predestina-
tion.

Resolved by them, that mention be made of man's fall.

Resolved by them, that those words 'to bring this to pass' shall not stand.

Dr. Wincop to pray with the House of Lords next week.

Debate about those words, 'to bring this to pass.'

Debate
resumed.

Mr. Reynolds offered something: 'As God hath appointed the elect unto glory, so hath He by the same eternal and most free purpose of His will fore-ordained all the means thereunto, which He in His counsel is pleased to appoint for the executing of that decree; wherefore they who are endowed with so excellent a benefit, being fallen in Adam, are called in¹ according to God's purpose.'

Mr. Chambers offered something.

Ordered—To debate the busin[ess] about Redemption of the elect only by Christ to-morrow morning.

Sess. 522.—October 22, 1645.—Wednesday morning.

Upon a debate about Mr. Bridges, the report from the Committee of Examinations concerning him was brought in and read.

Ordered—Respited till Friday morning.

Debate about Redemption of the elect only by Christ.

Debate
about redemption of elect only.

Mr. Calamy—I am far from universal redemption in the Arminian sense; but that that I hold is in the sense of our divines in the Synod of Dort,² that Christ did pay a price for all,—absolute intention for the elect, conditional intention for the reprobate in case they do believe,—that all men should be salvabiles, non obstante lapsu Adami . . . that Jesus Christ did not only die sufficiently for all, but God did intend, in giving of Christ, and Christ in giving Himself, did intend to put all men in a state of salvation in case they do believe.

Mr. Palmer—He would distinguish from the Arminians; they say all equally redeemed, but not so the other, and

Mr. Reynolds—This opinion cannot be asserted by any that can say he is not of the Remonstrants' opinion . . . upon a condition that they cannot perform, and God never intends to give them.

Mr. Calamy—The Arminians hold that Christ did pay a price for this intention only, that all men should be in an equal state of salvation. They say Christ did not purchase any impetration. . . . This universality of R[edemption] doth neither intrude upon either doctrine of special election or special grace.

² Acta Synodi Dordrechtanae, p. 603, Th. iii. ed. 1620.

Mr. Seaman—It is nothing whether the opinion of Re-^{SESS. 522.} monstrants or not. We must debate the truth and false-^{Oct. 22,} hood of it. . . . He doth not say a salvability quoad ^{1645.} homines, but quoad Deum . . . so far reconciled Himself ^{Debate} to the world, that He would have mercy on whom He ^{continued.} would have mercy.

Mr. Palmer—I desire to know whether he will understand it de omni homine.

Mr. Calamy—De adultis.

Mr. Whitakers . . .

Mr. Young—This controversy, when first started in the Church, they used a distinction: they said it was pro natura humana. . . . In the application he expresseth it only electis. Some speak of the former branch as that . . .

Mr. Gillespie—Nothing to the thing itself; but for the state of the question, let more be looked upon than that expressed in the proposition, because there is a concatenation of the death of Christ with the decrees; therefore we must see what they hold concerning that which in order goes before and what in order follows after. . . . Camero[n] saith for all upon condition of believing, but Amyrauld he hath drawn it further. . . . Whether he hold an absolute reprobation of all that shall not be saved. . . . A parte post what follows upon that conditional redemption.

Mr. Calamy—In the point of election, I am for special election; and for reprobation, I am for massa corrupta. . . . Those to whom He . . . by virtue of Christ's death, there is ea administratio of grace to the reprobate, that they do wilfully damn themselves.¹ I neither hold sufficient grace nor special grace.

Mr. Marshall—For order, you shall not need to know what this or that man's opinion is; if you dispute the thesis, you will state it so as that it rejects all contrary opinions.

Mr. Reynolds—The Synod intended no more than to declare the sufficiency of the death of Christ; it is pretium in se, of sufficient value to all,—nay, ten thousand worlds. There are two Adams,—one a fountain of misery, and the

 Debate continued. Mr. Seaman—All in the first Adam were made liable to damnation, so all liable to salvation in the second Adam.

Proposition to be debated. This proposition to be debated: 'That Christ did intend to redeem the elect only.'

Mr. Calamy—I argue from the iii. of Joh[n] 16, in which words a ground of God's intention of giving Christ, God's love to the world, a philanthropy the world of elect and reprobate, and not of elect only; it cannot be meant of the elect, because of that 'whosoever believeth' . . . xvi. Mark, 15. 'Go preach the gospel to every creature.' If the covenant of grace be to be preached to all, then Christ redeemed, in some sense, all—both elect and reprobate; but it is to be preached to all; there is a warrant for it. . . . For the minor, if the universal redemption be the ground of the universal promulgation, then . . . the minor, else there is no verity in promulgation. All God's promulgations are serious and true. . . . Faith doth not save me, but only as an instrument to apply Christ. There is no verity in the universal offer except founded in the . . .

Mr. Rutherford—All the argument comes to this: there can be no truth in this proposition except this be first granted, that Christ died in some sense. . . . I deny this connection . . . be[cause] it holds as well in election, justification, as in redemption; if he believe, he is as well elected and justified as redeemed.

Mr. Calamy—We do not speak of the application, for then it would bring it in, but we speak of the offer. It cannot be offered to Judas except he be salvable.

Mr. Rutherford—There is no difference betwixt redemption and justification in this. . . . The promise of justification is made no less to Judas than of redemption. . . . The ground of his is to make all salvable, and so justifiable.

Mr. Seaman—He makes it absurd. . . . But there is none. It comes only to this: look as every man was damnabilis . . . so is every man salvabilis; and God, if He please, may choose him, justify him, sanctify him.

Mr. Walker . . .

Mr. Marshall—The strength of his argument is either not taken [or] is not answered. . . . It is in this that there can no falsum subesse to the offer of the gospel.

continued.

Mr. Wilkinson—You know they cannot be partakers of redemption against whom Christ takes special exception; Christ prayed not for the world.

Mr. Gillespie—In answer to the two arguments,—one from the iii. Joh[n] 16. A. 1. The brother takes for granted that by the world is meant the whole world. It is a point much controverted. Our divines do deny that the word world must in some places be taken in another sense. . . . For that of the philanthropy it makes much against it. . . . I cannot understand how there can be such a universal love of God to mankind as is maintained. Those that will say it must needs deny the absolute reprobation; then alone¹ to those whom God hath absolutely reprobated both from salvation and the means of salvation. . . . For the next argument from xvi. Mark. . . . He conceives the ground of this universal offer is the institution² of Christ in dying. . . . For that of the truth . . . There is a truth in it: the connection of those two extremes must ever hold true faith and salvation. But what is that to a reprobate? He[re] is the mistak[e]. The voluntas decreti and mandati are not distinguished. . . . A man is bound to believe that he ought to believe, and that by faith he shall be saved. It is his duty. The command doth not hold out God's intentions; otherwise God's command to Abraham concerning sacrificing of his son . . . Said I cannot say so to a devil. . . . True; but reason is, that it is the revealed will of God that devils are absolutely excluded, but not so any man known to me.

Mr. Marshall—This distinction, there is use of it if rightly understood. We say more: there is not only a mandatum, but a promise.

Dr. Burges—You say the novum fœdus doth intend; then there be either two covenants; one general to the elect, and another special to the elect.

² Sic in MS., perhaps for 'intention.'

SESS. 522.
 Oct. 22,

 continued.

Mr. Calamy—The difference is not in the offer, but in the application. . . . That voluntas decreti comes only in the application. . . . For the word world . . . I grant it signifies the elect sometimes, but sometimes it signifies the whole world, and so it must do here. . . . For this love he saith he under— . . . There is a double love : general and special. A general love to the reprobate, and the fruit of this, a general offer, and general grace, and general reformation.

Mr. Gillespie—It is acknowledged the word world may suffer another sense—the elect, but said it must be a larger thing than believers. . . . A. This is still taken for granted, which is to be proved, for I say it is very good sense. God so loved the elect, that whosoever believes in Him . . . The reconciling of a general love with absolute reprobation is not answered. . . . The general offers of the gospel are not grounded upon the secret decree.

Mr. Lightfoot—I understand the word world in a middle sense. It is only in opposition to the nation of the Jews. . . . For the universal offer God intends as the salvation of the elect, so the inexcusableness of the wicked.

Mr. Price—For the first text suppose mankind be meant, yet it doth not follow that Christ intended all . . . For the latter text, it doth not follow that Christ did die intentionally for the redemption of all. . . . Prove that there is such a covenant with mankind. If so, why mention the children of the covenant? . . . Then the signs of the covenant might be generally administered (?) . . . Said this may be a truth, though to a congregation of reprobates the reason of the precious¹ (?) offer is be[cause] we do not know who is elect and reprobate.

Mr. Vines—That said of the covenant relates to the application. Is not the gospel a covenant, and is not that propounded to every creature? . . . What is the gospel preached to every creature founded upon but the blood of Christ. . . . By 'the world' I do not understand the Gentiles, but if I did, it were all one. . . . As is whether the world here do not signify more than the elect. It seems it doth, be[cause] the words do not else run well. This word denotes an intention in the gift and in the love. We could not live if there were not a general love of man¹ to mankind. . . . For that xvi. Mark, 15. . . . What is the gospel but a conditional proposition of a covenant? . . . What is this founded upon but the blood of Christ? We must either deny that there are effecting, etc.

Mr. Good . . .

Ordered—To proceed in the debate to-morrow morning.

Sess. 523.—October 23, 1645.—Thursday morning.

Mr. Marshall moved about the Ordinance come out about the sacrament. . . . It is so short in some things, that according to my present light we shall not be able to proceed in our ministry with a good conscience. If you do intend to petition the Honourable Houses to consider further of this business, we can never do it more seasonably than now.

Parliament's Ordinance

to.

Mr. Lightfoot—I desire that arguments may be rather sent than petitions.

R.—A Committee to draw a petition to both Houses of Parliament to desire some further relief in the business of the sacrament—one only dissenting.

Ordered—Mr. Marshall, Mr. Reynolds, Mr. Vines, Mr. Palmer, Mr. Young, to be a Committee to prepare a petition.

Proceed in the debate.

Mr. Goodwin—Two arguments brought . . . Said universal redemption must be the foundation of the preaching of the gospel to every creature. True, it must be preached to every creature; but then the question is, What is the gospel there? The message is reconciliation, 'God was in Christ,' and this contains a reconciling only of such a world to whom God doth not impute their trespasses. The decrees of God concerning the world of His elect kept up in indefinite expressions, that is the world; and hence there is a universal obligation of ministers to preach it to every creature, and upon every creature to come unto Christ. . . . I exemplify it by that in the [iv.] 11 to the Hebrews: Some must enter into this rest, therefore let us labour to enter continued. for Christ did not die for propositions, but for persons. . . .

 But the sense is rather . . .

Mr. Rutherford—For the two scriptures alleged yesterday desire when I give a reason of the denial of a proposition. . . . For that of iii. Joh. 16, three grounds of an argument taken from this place : 1. From the word loved ; a general love to elect and reprobate. 2. From the word world, generally taken, be[cause] distributive afterwards. 3. Grounded upon God's intention upon condition of faith. . . . For the first Christ speaks of a particular special love. . . . This all one with those places. . . . This love is parallel with that expressed in those three places. . . . The love of one giving his life for his friends . . . the love that moved Him to send His only-begotten Son. . . . If the love in the iii. of John be the same with those, as in those places is meant the special particular love of God commensurable with election . . . not one scripture in all the New Testament where it can be expounded for the general . . . 2. The love in the iii. of John 16 is restricted to the Church ; v. Eph. 21, restricted to a Church . . . so ii. Gal. 20 : loved me ; the apost[le] who lives the life of God by faith, . . . v. Rom. 8, the sinners and ungodly are set down to be the justified by faith. . . . Such a love as moved the husband Christ to give His life for His spouse, such as moved . . . such as God commends, for the highest love is a restricted special love. . . . 3. It is an actual saving love, and therefore not a general love.

Rom. v. 8, etc.

Report was made from the Committee of a petition to the Parliament about the Sacrament.

Mr. Goodwin—I must give my No to this, be[cause] something of setting up presbyterial classical government . . . and we have before dissented against that sent up concerning the Sacrament as imperfect.

Mr. Marshall gave an account to the Assembly that they had not yet an opportunity to deliver the petition, but should give them a further account concerning it.

The Assembly proceeded in the debate.

Mr. Vines—A connexive proposition if it be impossible in the assumption (?) . . . He that believes not shall be damned. This is so positively set down as that it implies not only to be a sin against a law, but a sin against a remedy. . . . They have some fruits of the death of Christ and the benefits thereof. . . . Whether this tends to make a man salvable we cannot so well say.

Mr. Harris—That which the brother last spake, his conclusion I wholly agree with. . . . Distinguish betwixt meritum mortis and propositum morientis. . . . I. About the stating of this question—a noble question. Objections strong on both sides; I see more than I can answer. The best way to answer an erroneous opinion is well to state the question. . . . I doubt whether there be any such thing at all as conditional decree . . . or, if there be any such thing, whether the condition founded upon a possibility. . . . Those two arguments mentioned, they are in part answered; by world there is meant the world of the Gentiles, as appears in the whole chap[ter]. His discourse is with Nicodemus, a Jew. . . . That of love is the highest love and highest expression of love that can be. . . . That that holds out the highest love that ever God sealed up to mankind, that cannot be meant of common love. . . . Debate upon Baptism; 'the grace of God bestowed sometimes before.' Debate resumed.

Mr. Whitakers.—That it doth confer grace I do not find, but our divines do hold it. . . . When they oppose the Papists, they say it is more than a sign and seal. . . . Chamier saith the grace that is signified is exhibited, so it is in the French Confession; it doth efficaciter donare. . . . I conceive that it doth not confer it ex opere operato. That union is not so universal, ad . . . Arguments: 1. That which the Scripture ascribes to baptism we are to ascribe. Baptism is an ordinance to effect those ends. . . . an ordinance of engrafting into Christ, and of our spiritual regeneration and new birth. . . . Baptized into the remission of sins. . . . Baptism saves, 1. Accompanied with the sign and thing signified, it is a saving ordinance. . . . For without grace none of those things can be. 2. A comparatis, if the word of God do instrumentally confer grace. . . . 3. From the Eucharist, if that be a sacrament of our spiritual growth, be[cause] an ordinance to confer that growth . . . with what proportion of reason I can say that of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper a means of conferring growth where is grace already, in the same proportion of reason it will hold about Baptism. . . . Said circumcision a sign of that which he had, being uncircumcised. . . . A. Those were extraordinary cases. . . . Those things that work only by signification, they work by the intervention of reason. . . . From the union of the sign and thing signified which is in the analogy, . . . and in conjuncta exhibitione as Ursin[us]. . . . when we lawfully receive it, God doth promise to bestow the inward . . . That which a minister is bound to pray for, that he is bound to believe.

Palmer on same subject.

Mr. Palmer—I think we have not said enough concerning the grace of baptism ; but all that he hath said doth not warrant the proposition before you. . . . In his sense the proposition is not proper. . . . There is something more than a bare sign, especially sometimes he understands thereby the first grace, and that his arguments have not proved . . . What the Scripture speaks of efficacy of baptism, it speaks of those that are grown up. We must suppose the person to be baptized to be a believer. . . . For that of the word there is a great difference, the word either external or internal as a necessary means. . . . For the parallel between two Sacraments. . . . I deny the consequence—the parallel—a thing may be instrumental to convey when there is a possibility of receiving of it ; but he that is without the just¹ grace hath nothing to make him in a capacity of receiving ; he is dead. . . . By the same argument it may be supposed that one sacrament may as well convey grace of conversion as the other. . . . For the union between sign and thing signified . . . true, they are not naked signs ; there is no nakedness in a seal. . . . A further union in the sacrament ; it is such a union as that whatsoever is promised by the word, that is granted unto him by the participation of the sign.

Mr. Whitakers—In the first argument he did not answer the Scriptures. . . . The Scripture speaks more about conferring than it doth either of signing and sealing. . . .

Report from the Committee of Printing read.

Report made of the propositions for Ceremonial and Judicial Laws committed formerly. Debate upon that report.

Sir Robert Harley brought a message from the Grand Committee to represent some doubts of theirs that there is not so clear an expression of some things in the enumeration of scandals as, '3. Any who shall purposely buy, sell, give, or keep any images or pictures of the Trinity, or any person thereof undefaced.' Our exceptions are, you leave this loose, and it reacheth to all public and private libraries that have books that have those pictures in them; they desire clearly to express that there may be a salvo for this. And there are many seals by which men hold their estates that have those pictures in them, and so keeping those things, I may be subject in the letter of the law to scandal, and so kept from the sacrament.

Petition to Parliament concerning ordination.

That a petition be drawn up to both Houses of Parliament to this purpose, 'whereas it hath pleased the Hon^{ble} Houses of Parliament to pass an ordinance for Ordination of Ministers in the several classical presbyteries, there is an extraordinary necessity that this should forthwith be put into execution, therefore the presbyteries may be commanded to be settled as to that purpose and to act as to that part, and that where there cannot at the present be any presbyteries settled, the next presbytery adjoining may have power to ordain for those that want, and humbly to desire that the rest of the government with all convenient speed may be settled.'

as Convener, was appointed ‘to consider of the best course for the speedy printing of the ancient copy of the Septuagint in His Majesty’s Library,’ and then in the custody of Mr. Patrick Young. This ‘ancient copy’ was the famous Alexandrian Codex presented to Charles I. by the Patriarch of Constantinople. Patrick Young, or Junius, the Keeper of the King’s Library (who sought the aid of the Assembly and Parliament to enable him to give the text of this ms. to the world), was a Scotchman, and an M.A. of the University of St. Andrews, who had been incorporated into the University of Oxford, and was regarded by Wood as the most learned Grecian of his time. In July 1645 a pension of £400 per annum was voted to him by the House of Commons, and in January 1647–8 this was commuted for a single payment of £2000. There is a necessity on principles of nature and Christian prudence that the Church have a distinct government. . . . If you take government, as you do, distinct from the doctrinal part, then I deny it to be distinct from the civil magistrate. . . . Instance in the xviii. of Matthew, there is not a distinct government by appoint[ment]. . . . There is no government there, for no party named in whom the government is, and no act of government by that person, nor anything else. . . . Both are denied be[cause] not a sufficient enumeration. Sess. 603.—March 13, 1645.—Friday morning.

Ordered—That no testimonial be received in this Assembly without a date.

Ordered—That Mr. Atwood Rotheram shall have his certificate.

Debate resumed on proposition, 'That Jesus Christ as King and Head of His Church,' etc. (Sic.)

Mr. Coleman—How unwilling I was and am to this opposition, this whole Assembly will bear me out, and . . . I foresee the consequent will not be so good¹ as was desired. . . . I was of the Committee, and brought in a proposition that I suppose will pass unmine contradicente. I move again that that may be put to the Q. I suppose this will not be thought fit to be in the Confession of Faith. . . . I desire to premise this word; I entreat that we may not have any ill terms. . . . Only recapitulate one word given by way of answer. If they will confirm² now, the argument is at at * an end, viz. the jurisdictional power is not expressed in this text, but supposed. . . . Concerning the word power, I hesitate, but will not litigate; but if you mean only a declarative power. . . .

Repeats his admission.

Mr. Marshall—I hope the Assembly doth very well remember what the argument and words were.

Mr. Rayner—You might draw this to a short conclusion concerning this text; this brother doth deny only a jurisdictional power. . . . Called to order. . . .

I oppose the answer as not sufficient. . . .

Desired to go on in a continued discourse.

Mr. Coleman—I have contracted my thoughts to four things, whether this place holds out an ecclesiastical jurisdictional power in the Church to proceed to censure; for the negative those four things. As I rise in number, so in strength. . . . I. Here is no expression of it. . . . Where there is power given, there it is expressed clearly. For the Old Test. I think that Scripture 'if he will not hear the priest or judge:' there is the particular censure. In the New

Test., 2 Thess. iii. [14], 'if a[ny man],' etc. . . . 2. This is Era[s]tus, let him be to thee, (i.)¹ the same thee meant in former verses. Nothing follows upon the contumacy of the party but to leave the party offended to take what course he pleaseth. . . . 3. 'As a heathen and publican,' this can be no Church censure, or consequent of a Church censure, for then it must be an exclusion from Church ordinances. 1. Concerning the publican; if publicans were not excluded from any Church ordinances then, . . . for I can for this give such a demonstration as I challenge any man living to give an answer. It is this: he was an Israelite. It's answered that there were publicans that were not Israelites. . . . 2. For the heathen; said publican from civil, heathen from spiritual, but I say both of them must be of one. . . . The ordinances and duties of Israel were of two sorts: either ceremonial or moral. C.² (i.)³ offerings, M.² (i.)³ prayer and praises of God. Concerning the first, to some of those the heathen were admitted as to the free-will offerings; but for the moral duties, it was not their vice, but their birth, that excluded from them. For the moral duties, to all those duties the heathen were admitted, as 1 King. viii. 41; so that a heathen had liberty to come to perform any moral duties of piety, and had a place appointed them in the Temple for those ordinances. . . . Add parallel places in the New Testament, as xii. John certain Greeks came up to worship . . . xiii. Act. 42, Scaliger Gentiles adorabant immolabant . . . 4. To interpret this scripture 'be a heathen and a publican;' this makes this to be contrary to another scripture. Compare it with 2 Thess. iii. 14. Hearing in both, the same punishment, in both, the same consequent is contrary one to another; 'count him not as an enemy, but admonish him as a brother' . . . I appeal to that book of Church government by Divine Right,⁴ 230 page, 250 p. . . . If he that

 continued.

Mr. Rutherford—I conceive I have this argument very often in that book. . . . He who refuseth to hear the Church and before was esteemed a brother, but now upon his refusal is to be esteemed as a heathen and publican, is excommunicated. The major proposition I prove out of the definition of all our divines, the minor out of the text. . . .
 For the two places . . . Calvin and Beza, Baines and Piscator, expound that place of excommunication, but this Assembly hath voted that place of suspension from the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. . . . There is no contradiction between those two. . . . to be as a publican and admonished as a brother. . . . These two differences . . . 1.
 The party thus cast out is under the medicine of the Church, and therefore but 'as a heathen.' . . . 2. In respecting him as a heathen, the Church is to intend that he may be gained, which is a spiritual end, and therefore the Holy Ghost should say he is to be esteemed so. . . . 'Admonish as a brother' is not inconsistent with that of a heathen and publican. . . . To admonish as a brother is actus juris naturæ—as a brother, but not as Church brother.
 He builds much upon the word heathen and publican;
 they are taken copulative, and not distributive. . . . We lay the last weight upon the word publican as separated from heathen, but take them both together. . . . To thee, (i.) to (See in MS.) any man, for so the whole law is is. . . . A publican is esteemed a profane and flagitious man. Said they were not excluded from Church ordinances; but he should have proved that de jure they were not excluded. . . . Publicans and heathens so remaining were excluded and secluded from many, and he saith it was for their birth, and not for their vice. . . . If for their birth, then it was typical that in the New Testament those that are not brethren in a church fellowship are certainly (?) to be excluded, xliv. Ezek. 8, 9. . . . Though the heathen at some times were admitted to some, yet it proves that there was a sort of debarring, and is not this a byteries,* p.

sort of debarring? . . . But he hath not told us what is meant by the word Church—if the Sanhedrim meant . . . Said there was not such a thing as a Christian Church when Christ uttered the same word xvi. Matth.; there was not then a Christian formed Church, but in the xvi. of Matth. he must mean a Christian Church—not the Sanhedrim, for then the sense must be, I will build my Sanhedrim upon this rock, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against the Sanhedrim.

Mr. Gillespie—The strength of the argument is no jurisdiction. If all this were true, it is not against the proposition that Christ hath instituted a government distinct . . . For his four particulars . . . Said this place doth not express any censure. . . . To prove it, he cites two places where the power is express; xvii. Deut. . . . A. The parallel is made in this particular . . . It is not said the judge shall put him to death. He may bring it from other scriptures. . . . It holds out that he shall die, but by whose hand is not said. . . . That of 2 Thes. iii. 14, . . . if 'to thee' be meant of a private man, then it implies a contradiction, that Christ will have one and the same person, to be so to one single person and a brother to the whole Church. . . . I take an argument of Erastus to prove that the whole Church should forgive the offender when he testifies his repentance, be[cause] Christ commands this to a private brother, xvii. Luke. The same thing commanded to one must be a duty to the whole Church. . . . 'To thee' is not meant only of a particular person, but he must be to the whole Church by this necessary consequence. . . . If one single person must be so to a single brother when he offends, then much more when he offends the whole Church, . . . otherwise Christ gives more power to one single person than He gives to the whole Church. . . . For his third, said heathens and publicans were not excluded from public ordinances. . . . This brother can never prove that heathens and publicans were not excluded from Church ordinances. . . . Said publicans were Israelites; all Israelites were not admitted to ordinances. . . . Philo and Josephus both say profane, notorious, scandalous sinners were debarred from the Temple,—publicans, (i.e.) prophane and scandalous publicans. That of the publican that went up to the Temple to pray that might be atrium Gentilium, often called the Temple. . . . 'Even as this publican,' an emphasis in that, a publican that was not a profane, scandalous man. . . . For the point of the heathens it cannot be proved; for that of Scaliger, I deny it not, but admit it as true. They had not a fellowship in Church ordinances as Church members. . . . They were admitted as Proselytes when the[y] gave proof of their piety. . . . For the 4th: The seeming contradiction betwixt xviii. Matth. I only add this place is taken for an argument. . . .

Mr. Lightfoot—I think both the opponent and answerer do not take up the right sense. . . . Publicans amongst the Jews had as free access to the Temple as any Jew whatsoever. The reason of their offence was their office,—betrayers of their own nation into slavery: they were not secluded from the Temple. . . . Not as heathens came to the Temple, but when proselytes. . . . The sense of it in this place is not in reference to admission or suspension from the public ordinances, but in regard of civil converse.

Mr. Seaman—Whatsoever becomes of this place, the argument is not strong against the proposition. Though there were no excommunication, yet there may be a government. . . . I suppose he grants the word Church relates to a Church Assembly. . . . As touching those arguments he brings, be[cause] there is nothing expressed, we deny this consequence, for many places where power is implied, and yet no censure set down. . . . He will say he grants it quoad nos. . . . It is considerable how this text hath been interpreted in all ages; this made use of with reference to all ecclesiastical assemblies. . . . For that of heathens and publicans, I wonder at the confidence of the brother. . . . For that of the opposition betwixt xviii. Matth. [and iii.] Thess. there is a distinction about excommunication. Those places have no contradiction at all.

Mr. Lightfoot— . . .

Mr. Coleman—Said grant it doth not hold out excommunication, then it doth not hold out. . . .

SESS. 603.
March 13,
1645.

Mr. Vines—Saith¹ there is no particular expressed. . . . There is no sin expressed, and yet there is an offence. . . . There is no enumeration. . . . 2. Here is a particular expressed. . . . 1. A declaration to be made or information to be given to the Church, and then some act of the Church upon it declarative he allows. . . . And that there is a particular by way of sentence be[cause] there is an execution of that sentence. This is not an arbitrary thing, but in way of putting in execution the sentence of the Church. . . . For the 2d, Christ having spoken in the immediate coherence about seeking a lost sheep, He comes in with this, 'if thy brother shall offend,' showing how the Church should gain a lost brother, and seek² (?) him, a lost sheep. . . . And this must needs be a Church act. . . . A brother—what, a Jew brother? No, a Christian brother. What should Christian brothers do before the Sanhedrim? . . . Gained thy brother, (i.)³ brought him to repentance . . . from a sin sinned against God, and so Christ pursues the same thing in coherence. . . . For the way of bringing this man unto repentance, it is here set down. . . . The Church must bring this man to repentance for his sin, if he will not be gained. . . . 'To thee,' saith he, no Church act. . . . A. Not to thee, till he have not heard the Church, so that some sentence of the Church must go before. . . . To thee—it is in the second person, but that is the result of his not hearing the Church. . . . 'Verily I say to you, whatsoever [ye shall] bind on earth.' He doth not speak this to me, but of the Church that binds him. Those are still upon the same process and proceeding. . . . It is not to repair an injury in matter of meum and tuum, but to bring him to repentance. . . . For heathen and publican, said taken both in a notion. We say he deals with me as a Jew and Turk. . . . For his last argument 'contrary to another text.' . . . The proper work of excommunication is not so much to throw men out, as by the throwing out to bring them in.

Mr. Palmer—His argument is for an enumeration. It is not a good argument to say, here is no censure, and therefore no power, Tit. iii. i. . . . For his second 'let him be to thee,' though primarily it may be meant of a particular wrong. . . . but there is consequence, that be[cause] Christ doth direct His speech to them whom He spoke to first, therefore no Church censure. . . . Is it a punishment or not? . . . Christ's meaning is not here, to prescribe any¹ for satisfaction of a particular wrong, . . . but of gaining a man to repentance. . . . In the v. of Matth. Christ saith, 'if a man smite thee on the one cheek, turn the other.' . . . It seems to be acknowledged by him, that the Church here was the Church Christian. . . . I desire to know whether this be a precept or no, or a permission. If a precept, what kind of precept is it? Had it its being aforehand? . . . Where is this in all the Old Testament? . . . It is so far from being a worldly recompense, that this be a course to put me into worse condition than I was ever in before. . . . If a precept, whether it be a perpetual precept or no, written for our learning, for the Sanhedrim was not long-lived. It was not the heathen magistrate, be[cause] the apost[le] forbids it. . . . When was this precept written? Spoken when Christ was upon earth, but written many years after by Matthew. Did not this gospel concern all Christians? . . . If it be Church Christian, then here must be a censure. . . . The meaning of that is, let there be no familiar converse between thee and them.

Mr. Mainard—I desire to satisfy my conscience. That which most sticks with me—it seems to me to be almost cardo questionis, whether this be a command, and what that Church is spoken of. . . . Said this must be that Church which Christ spoke of—'upon this rock I will build my Church.' The word Church doth trouble us more than it need. . . . It cannot be understood of the same; for there Christ speaks of His Church from the foundation of the world to the end of it—the universal Church.

Mr. Seaman— . . .

Mr. Vines—For that of xvi. Matth. and 18 [v.] I am of his sense, in that it is meant of the invisible Church, but it may be meant of the Christian Church. . . . For personal injuries, . . . let us prove what is here meant in bringing a man from his sin to repentance.

Mr. Reynolds moved, that in regard that Mr. Wood had lately in his absence passed the approbation of the Assembly, against whom he conceived there was great cause of exception, that he might have liberty to enter his dissent; and accordingly Mr. Reynolds, Mr. Seaman, Mr. Tuckney, and Mr. Palmer, did enter their dissents as to the approbation of Mr. Wood. . . . Upon farther debate concerning him, it was Ordered that Mr. Ley do move the chairman of the Committee 'of Plundered Ministers,' that Mr. Wood's certificate from this Assembly may be respited for a day or two, till the Assembly do give a further account concerning him.

Debate of Church government in hands of
officers.

The Assembly entered upon the debate of the proposition, 'That Jesus Christ, as King and Head of His Church, hath appointed an ecclesiastical government in His Church, in the hand of Church officers, distinct from the government of the civil magistrate.'

Mr. Coleman moved to pass the proposition brought in by the Committee, and not to debate this proposition; but that being not hearkened unto, because of the order of the Assembly for this debate, he moved again, that before he did enter upon the debate, the Assembly would determine whether, if he did dispute against the proposition, he might do it without breach of covenant and charge of perjury.

This was debated, and the Assembly thought not fit to pass any resolution upon that, it being free to any member of the Assembly to speak his conscience in the Assembly; and so he was called unto the argument.

SESS. 601.
March 9,

His argument he framed to this purpose : The Church of the New Testament doth not hold out any such distinction betwixt civil and ecclesiastical government. If it do so, then it is either in the xviiith of Matth., or 1 Cor. v., or in some other Scripture ; but neither of these Scriptures doth hold out two distinct governments, ergo . . . He began with the xviiith of Matth., and the debate of this session was upon that Scripture syllogistically. After debate, because Mr. Coleman could not be in the Assembly the next day, it was ordered to proceed in the debate of this Scripture on Friday.

towards the saving of these Three Nations from the bondage of tyranny and idolatry, by taking off many yokes and burthens, both in matters of Religion and of Civil concernment, by laying the foundations and beginnings of a positive reformation, and by engaging this kingdom in that Solemn and Sacred League and Covenant, which, with our hands lifted up to the Most High God, we have sworn; and, as we esteem ourselves always bound to acknowledge these and many other blessings, which the God of heaven hath made this Honourable Parliament His instruments to convey unto these poor kingdoms, with all affectionate thankfulness to God and to the Honourable Houses, so we profess ourselves the more obliged hereby to show all active readiness to promote all the commands of Parliament tending to Reformation of Religion; and that nothing but conscience of our duty to God, to yourselves, and the souls of the rest of our brethren, the people of the Lord, could excuse us in any seeming backwardness to act according to your Vote and Ordinances leading thereunto. Yet are we, to our grief, constrained at this time, in all humility and faithfulness, to represent to the Honourable Houses, that there is still a great defect in the enumeration of scandalous sins, very many scandalous sins ordinarily committed in all places, and formerly presented by your Petitioners, being still omitted; and that the provision of Commissioners to judge of scandals not enumerated, appears to our consciences to be so contrary to that Way of Government which Christ hath appointed in His Church, in that it giveth a power to judge of the fitness of persons to come to the Sacrament unto such as our Lord Christ hath not given that power unto; and also layeth upon us a necessity of admitting some scandalous persons to the Sacrament, even after conviction before the Eldership, and to be so differing from all example of the best Reformed Churches, and such a real hindrance to the bringing of the Churches of God in the three kingdoms to the nearest conjunction and uniformity, and in all these respects so disagreeable to our Covenant, that we dare not practise according to that provision; and we do evidently foresee, that such Commissioners will not only be offensive to the Reformed Churches abroad, but a discouragement to those amongst ourselves who are or shall be chosen elders, and a stumbling-block to very many of our best and conscientious people, who have long waited for Reformation, and are endangered to be cast upon the snare of separation, and no way left to reduce them or others who are already fallen into it ; Inasmuch that we cannot forbear to profess our fears of God's sad displeasure if this should be continued, and the just imputation of sin unto us, if we, who have been held worthy by the Honourable Houses to be called to give them Advice in matters of Religion, should altogether hold our peace at this time.

Wherefore your Petitioners, in discharge of their fidelity to God, to His Church, and to your Honours, do humbly pray, that the several elderships may be sufficiently enabled to keep back all such as are notoriously scandalous from the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, of which we must, as formerly in our Petition we have done, say [it] expressly belongeth to them by divine right, and by the will and appointment of Jesus Christ, which, with the help of superior Assemblies, in cases of appeal or mal-administration, will prevent (through the blessing of God) all the feared inconveniences ; and the Magistrate (to whom we profess the Church to be accountable for their proceedings in all their Elderships and Church Assemblies, and punishable by him with civil censures for their miscarriages) may be so abundantly satisfied of the righteousness and equity thereof, as we still hope God will inspire the Honourable Houses with such wisdom and zeal, as by their authority to strengthen the hands of his Officers in their duties herein, and even to command them to act zealously and faithfully in them.

And your Petitioners shall pray, etc.

Paul Best¹ was brought before a Committee of the Assembly. He persisted in his errors.

¹ Though so frequent reference is made to Paul Best in these minutes, there is no detailed statement of the heretical opinions with which he was charged. This omission, however, is supplied in the Journals of the House of Commons, to whose bar he was repeatedly brought. Under date 4th April 1646, we have the following entry: 'Paul Best was brought in by the Serjeant to the Bar, and kneeled, the Serjeant standing by him on the outside of the Bar. Mr. Speaker commanded him to stand up, and acquainted him that he was brought to the Bar, upon information given to this House of some horrid opinions maintained by him in writing, and wished him to hearken to what he should be charged with by a member of the House. Mr. Millington stood up, and charged the said Paul Best with several horrid blasphemies, proved against him before a Committee of this House, to whom the examination of his crimes was referred and delivered in the charge, and the books that were sent up with the said Paul Best. Mr. Speaker told him that he was to give answer to the charge. Paul Best, standing at the Bar, answered, that he acknowledged the holy and heavenly Trinity, and doth not speak against it, but hoped to be saved by it; but said further, that he denieth the Tripersonality of Athanasius, and that it is Romish and Popish, and doth detest it till he be otherwise convinced. Diverse other questions arising from the matter of his charge were appointed by the House to be propounded to him by Mr. Speaker: which were propounded to him accordingly, and particular answers given by him to the said questions, wherein he did deny, that the Godhead of Jesus Christ is co-equal, co-eternal, and co-existent with the Godhead of the Father.'

A Committee of the House was appointed to deal with him, and also a Committee of divines, who held repeated conference with him. But they do not appear to have succeeded in convincing him of his errors; and though he was kept in prison, he was so far from being intimidated by this, that he published soon after a pamphlet, bearing the pungent title, 'Mysteries 1646. session.

Sess. 632.—May 1, 1646.—Friday morning.

Mr. Calamy, Mr. Carrill, Mr. Seaman, were appointed to pray with the Lords, Commons, and Committee of both kingdoms.

The paper brought from the House of Commons yesterday was read again. Upon a motion made by Mr. Palmer it was humilia-

 ordered.

Ordered—That a day of humiliation be kept by this Assembly in this place the next week, in reference to this great business that now is before us.

Resolved upon the Q., that Tuesday next shall not be the day.

Resolved that Wednesday next shall be the day of our humiliation.

Ordered—That five be employed in the work of that day.

sons; and whether such powers are in them only or in any of them, and in which of them jure divino and by the will and appointment of Jesus Christ?

VII. Whether there be any certain and particular rules expressed in the Word of God, the Elderships or Presbyteries, Congregations or Persons, or any of them, in the exercise and execution of the powers aforesaid; and what are those rules?

VIII. Is there anything contained in the Word of God, that the supreme Magistracy in a Christian State may not judge and determine, What are the aforesaid notorious and scandalous offences, and the manner of suspension for the same: and in what particulars concerning the premises is the said supreme Magistracy, by the Word of God, excluded?

IX. Whether the provision of Commissioners to judge of scandals not enumerated (as they are authorized by the Ordinance of Parliament) be contrary to that way of Government which Christ hath appointed in His Church, and wherein are they so contrary?

In answer to these particulars, the House of Commons desire of the Assembly of Divines their proofs from Scripture; and to set down the several texts of Scripture in the express words of the same. It is Ordered that every particular minister of the Assembly of Divines, that is or shall be at the debate of any of these Questions, do upon every Resolution which shall be presented to this House concerning the same, subscribe his respective name, either with the affirmative or negative as he gives his vote: And that those that do dissent from the major part shall set down their positive opinions, with the express text of Scripture upon which their opinions are grounded.—Journals of House of Commons, vol. iv. pp. 519, 520.

Ordered—Mr. Palmer, Mr. Whitakers, Mr. Arrowsmith, SESS. 632.
 Mr. Case, Mr. Cawdry, shall be the five to be employed ; May 1, three of them to pray, and two of them to preach, as they 1646.
 shall conclude amongst themselves.

Upon a debate about the attendance of the members of the Assembly in all this debate, it was Ordered—That letters be sent to all the members of Attend-Assembly to desire their attendance, according to the order ance of of the Lords and Commons. Mr. Reynolds, Mr. Ley, Mr. members Spurstow, and Dr. Temple, their reasons for necessary ordered.

Sess. 638.—May 13, 1646.—Wednesday morning.

Ordered—That Mr. Nuthall be approved without coming up to be examined.

Ordered—That Mr. Case and Mr. Arrowsmith visit the Prolocutor in the name of this Assembly.

It was moved again in the Assembly, that the Brethren,

SESS. 638. according to their desire yesterday, may be a Committee
 May 13, by themselves; and Mr. Bridge was desired to speak 1646. whether it were still desired by them. Mr. Bridge answered that he did not move for it yesterday, that they that did are not present, and he can say nothing to it, but desires to be silent in it; whereupon it was laid aside for that time.

Resolved upon the Q., To adjourn the Assembly into three Committees till twelve of the clock. It was accordingly done, and at the time appointed the Assembly did meet again; and report was made from the first Committee.

Ordered—That Mr. Reynolds his business be laid aside till he bring a testimonial to satisfy the Assembly, and then to be taken into further consideration; and that Mr. Ley be entreated to speak to the chairman of the Committee for Plundered Ministers, that there be no further proceedings in the business of Mr. Reynolds till the Assembly be further satisfied concerning him.

Ordered—That the three Committees do meet in the afternoon.

 consequences. Resolved upon the Q., Acts xiii. 34, 'And as concerning that He raised Him up from the dead, now no more to return to corruption, He said on this wise, I will give you the sure mercies of David,' which proves the resurrection of Christ by a consequence only.

Resolved upon the Q., Heb. i. 6, 'And again, when He bringeth in the first Begotten into the world, He saith, And let all the angels of God worship Him,' where it is proved that Christ is the Son of God by a consequence.

Sess. 641.—May 18, 1646.—Monday morning.

The Protestation was read.

The Assembly proceeded in the debate of 'consequences'; and upon debate it was Ordered—'And this may be cleared by sundry other instances, many more of the articles of faith being proved by Christ and His apostles out of the Old Testament only by consequence.'

*Sess. 677.—July 22, 1646.—Wednesday morning.*July 22, 1646.Death of
Twisse.

In the time of the last Recess of the Assembly, Dr. Twisse the Prolocutor died; whereupon, when the members of the Assembly met in the place of the Assembly, they thought fit to acquaint both Houses of Parliament with his death, and to desire their further order; which was accordingly done by Dr. Burges. The Houses of Parliament, taking it into consideration, sent an Order to the Assembly for Mr. Herle to be Prolocutor in the stead of Dr. Twisse, lately dead. The Order was read; and Mr. Herle was called to the Chair.¹

Mr. Rouse and Mr. Tate being sent with the Order above mentioned, did also inform the Assembly that 'they were commanded by the House of Commons to desire the Assembly to hasten the perfecting of the Confession of Faith and the Catechism, because of the great use there² may be of them in the kingdom, both for the suppressing of errors and heresies, and the informing of the ignorance of the people.'

The Assembly took into consideration how the funeral of Dr. Twisse should be ordered, it being by his friends referred wholly to the Assembly; whereupon it was

July 27, 1646.—Monday morning.

There wanted some members to make a full Assembly, and therefore they sat in a Grand Committee.

Sess. 680.—July 30, 1646.—Thursday morning.

The Assembly proceeded in the debate where they left ;
 and for the better connecting of the words following to those going before, for the clearing of some difficulties in the debate, it was agreed to leave out the word 'upon,' and the mention of the particular graces, and so the words following were

Assurance of salvation.

Resolved upon the Q., These words shall be added to the former, 'the inward evidence of those graces unto which these promises are annexed, and the testimony of the Spirit of adoption witnessing with our spirits that we are the children of God, which Spirit is the earnest of our inheritance, whereby we are sealed unto the day of redemption.'

Ordered—'This infallible certainty whereby the believer knows himself to be in the state of grace and salvation, doth not so belong unto the essence of faith as that a man cannot be a true believer or justified person without it,'

Resolved upon the Q., 'yet a true believer being enabled by the Spirit to know the things that are freely given him of God may without extraordinary revelation in the right use of ordinary means attain thereunto.'

Resolved upon the Q., 'And therefore it is the duty of every one to give all diligence to make his calling and election sure, that thereby his heart may be enlarged in love and thankfulness unto the Lord, in strength and cheerfulness in the duties of obedience and inward peace and joy in the Holy Ghost.' SESS. 680.

July 30,

Ordered—'This assurance of salvation may several ways in true believers be shaken, diminished, and intermitted,'

Resolved upon the Q., 'by negligence in preserving of it; by falling into some special sin, which woundeth the conscience and grieveth the Spirit; by some sad and heavy temptation, or by God's own withdrawing the light of His countenance and suffering even such as fear Him to walk in darkness and have no light;'

Ordered—'yet true believers are never utterly destitute of that seed of the Spirit, and life of faith and love of Christ and of the brethren, and conscience of duty, out of which this assurance may in due time arise and revive again, and by the which in the meantime their spirit is supported from utter despair.'

Mr. Palmer entered his dissent to the word 'or,'¹ before 'by God's own withdrawing.'

Mr. Gillespie gave his books² dedicated unto the Assembly to the Prolocutor and the rest of the members of the Assembly then present, for which he had thanks returned by the Prolocutor in the name of the Assembly. Mr. Gillespie presents his book.

SESS. 698. The Assembly proceeded in the debate, and upon debate Sept. 3, it was 1646.

 Debate of the law
 continued.

Resolved upon the Q., This addition shall be made, 'though freed from the curse thereof threatened in the law.'

Resolved upon the Q., The word 'afflictions' shall be put in instead of the word 'chastisements.'

Upon a debate about the promises, it was Resolved upon the Q., The question shall be put.

Resolved upon the Q., 'The promises of the law show God's approbation of obedience.'

Ordered—To proceed in the debate.

Sess. 699.—Sept. 4, 1646.—Friday morning.

Mr. Case and Mr. Palmer were appointed to pray with the Lords and Commons for the week following.

Ordered—That Mr. Wildbore have no approbation from this Assembly, and that a return be made to the Commissioners of the Great Seal.

Resolved upon the Q., That the Assembly shall sit in the afternoons after Wednesday next.

The Assembly proceeded in the debate.

Resolved upon the Q., An addition shall be considered in reference to the last proposition.

Resolved upon the Q., These words shall be added, 'and what they may expect of temporal blessings in a way of faithfulness.'

Resolved upon the Q., 'Neither is it an evidence that a man is under the law, and not under grace, when he refrains from evil and doeth good, because the law encourageth to the one and deters from the other,'

Resolved upon the Q., 'but rather a sign of the power of God's grace in him, when his heart is subdued conscientiously to live according to the Rule, though in things contrary to the dictate of corrupt nature, from the consideration of God's goodness in rewarding freely those that do well, and of his justice in punishing them that do ill.'

Ordered—'As a glass, wherein we may see the deformities of our natures, and the transgressions of our lives, and to examine ourselves by it, we may be more convinced, and humbled, and self-condemned for, and brought to a greater hatred against, sin; as thereby appearing to be so hateful in God's sight.' SESS. 699.

Sept. 4,

Report was made from the Grand Committee of the Assembly concerning 'the Resurrection of the Dead.' It was debated, and upon debate it was Ordered—The title 'Of the Resurrection of the Dead.' Debate of resurrection of the dead.

Resolved upon the Q., 'There is no resurrection of the soul, for the souls of men do neither die nor sleep with their bodies in death, but the bodies of all shall be raised up at the last day, the self same bodies and no other, with different qualities, and shall be united again to their souls for ever.' R.—'The bodies of the unjust shall by the power of Christ be raised to dishonour, the bodies of the just by his Spirit to honour.'

The Assembly debated the Report 'of the Last Judgment;' and upon debate it was Resolved upon the Q., The title 'Of the Last Judgment and Life Eternal.'

Ordered—'There shall be a day wherein the world shall be judged in righteousness by Jesus Christ, the Son, to whom all power and all judgment is given of the Father.'

Resolved upon the Q., 'In which day not only the Apostate angels shall be judged, but likewise all persons that have lived upon earth shall appear before the tribunal of Christ to give an account of their thoughts, words, and deeds unto God, and to receive according to what they have done in the body whether good or evil.' Last judgment.

Ordered—'As Christ would have us to be certainly persuaded that there shall be a time of judgment,'

Resolved upon the Q., 'both to deter all men from sin, and for the greater consolation of the godly in their adversity,'

Ordered—'so he will yet have the day of judgment to be unknown to men,'

Ordered—'that they may shake off all carnal security, being always watchful and prepared because they know not at what hour the Lord will come.'

SESS. 699. Ordered—‘The end of God’s appointing this day of Sept. 4, judgment is for the manifestation of the glory of his 1646. mercy and goodness to them that believe, and of his truth and justice against them that are wicked and disobedient, in the eternal salvation of the elect and damnation of the reprobate.’

Ordered—‘For then shall the righteous go into everlasting life and receive that fulness of joy and refreshing, which shall come from the presence of the Lord ; but the wicked, who know not God and obey not the gospel of Jesus Christ, shall be cast into eternal torments, and be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and the glory of his power.’

Resolved upon the Q., No more shall be added to the Report of the Last Judgment.

Ordered to debate the Report ‘of Faith,’ the next Session.

Sess. 700.—Sept. 9, 1646.—Wednesday morning.

Dr. Stanton made Report of the Article concerning Repentance. It was read.

 faith.

The Assembly entered upon the debate ‘of Faith ;’ and upon debate it was Ordered—The title ‘Of saving Faith.’

Resolved upon the Q., ‘Saving faith is a grace wrought by the Spirit of Christ in the hearts of the elect, enabling them to believe to the saving of the soul.’

Resolved upon the Q., ‘This faith is ordinarily wrought by the ministry of the word.’

Resolved upon the Q., ‘By this faith a Christian believeth whatsoever is revealed in the Word to the soul to be true, for the authority of God himself speaking therein.’

Ordered—‘As faith thus extends itself to every word of God in Scripture, so doth it further act differently upon that which each particular passage containeth in it.’

Resolved upon the Q., ‘The principal acts of Saving Faith are accepting, receiving, and resting upon Christ alone, for justification, sanctification, and eternal life, by virtue of the Covenant of grace.’

Ordered—‘It likewise resteth upon every other promise of God even for this life also.’

SESS. 700.
Sept. 9,
1646.

Ordered—‘It worketh by love, in yielding obedience to the commands, and by fear in trembling at the threatenings of the Word.’

Resolved upon the Q., ‘This faith is different in degrees, weak or strong; may be assailed with doubting, but gets the victory; cannot wholly fail or be lost, but at length obtaineth the end thereof, the salvation of the soul, Christ the author being the finisher thereof.’

Sess. 701.—Sept. 9, 1646.—Wednesday afternoon.

The Assembly proceeded in the debate of the article concerning ‘Good Works;’ and upon debate it was Ordered—The title ‘Of Good Works.’

Ordered—‘Good works are the fruits of a true and lively faith.’

Ordered—‘We cannot by our best works merit the pardon of sin or eternal life; because when we have done all we can, we have done but our duty and are unprofitable servants; and also because there is always much weakness and imperfection in them, so that they cannot endure the severity of God’s judgment, neither can they make any satisfaction for sin past, nor hold any proportion with glory to come.’

Ordered—‘Yet notwithstanding they are through Christ pleasing and acceptable to God, whose workmanship we are, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them,’

good works.

Resolved upon the Q., ‘so as having our fruit unto holiness we shall have the end eternal life.’

Ordered—‘It is the Spirit of Christ in regenerate persons that enables them to all that good which at any time they do, and they are so far from having any strength in themselves for holy performances that notwithstanding the graces they have already received there is always required a continued influence from the same holy and blessed Spirit to work in them both to will and to do.’

Ordered—‘Yet are not regenerate persons thereupon to SESS. 701. grow negligent as if they were not bound to any duty but Sept. 9, upon a special motion of the Spirit, but they are always 1646. to stir up the grace of God in them.'

Resolved upon the Q., 'Works done by persons unregenerate though for the matter of them they may be the things God commands, yet because they proceed not from a heart purified by faith and are not done in a right manner, nor to a right end, the glory of God, they cannot make men meet to receive grace from God, but they are sinful, and cannot please God.'
 Sic. R

 works.

Resolved upon the Q., 'They who in their obedience attain to the greatest height, which is possible in this life, are yet so far from being able to supererogate, and to do more for God than God requires of them, as that they are never able to do so much as in duty they are bound to do.'

Resolved upon the Q., To add after these words, 'please God,' 'yet, notwithstanding, the neglect of duties in them is more displeasing.'

Resolved upon the Q., 'The persons of believers being accepted through Christ, their works, though imperfect and defective, are also accepted in him, yet not as if through Christ their works were made perfectly holy and good and so unblameable and unproveable in God's sight in this life; but that God looking upon them in Christ is pleased to accept that which is sincere though accompanied with much weakness and imperfection.'

Resolved upon the Q., 'The works which God would have his people to walk in are such as he hath commanded in his holy Scripture, and not such works as men have devised out of their own brain, of a blind zeal and devotion without the warrant of the word of God.' These words to be added after the first paragraph.

Sess. 702.—Sept. 10, 1646.—Thursday morning.

Debate of repentance.

The Assembly entered upon the debate of Repentance; and upon debate it was Ordered—The title 'Of Repentance unto Life.'

Resolved upon the Q., 'Repentance unto life is an evangelical grace, whereby a sinner, out of sight of the filthiness and odiousness of sin as contrary to the holy and righteous law of God, and upon the apprehension of God's mercy in Christ to penitent sinners, grieves so and hates his sins, that he purposeth and endeavoureth to turn from all sin unto God.'

SESS. 702.
Sept. 10,
1646.

Resolved upon the Q., 'Although repentance be not the cause for which a sinner is pardoned, nor required as a satisfaction for sin, or to be rested in or trusted unto for itself; and although the pardon of sin be the act of God's free grace in Christ; yet, notwithstanding, repentance is so necessary to a sinner as that he may not expect pardon, that doth not truly repent.'

Of repentance.

Ordered—'Men ought not to content themselves with a general repentance, but it is every man's duty to endeavour to repent of his particular sins particularly.'

Resolved upon the Q., 'He that hath scandalized the Church of Christ ought to be willing to declare his repentance to the Church by a public confession of his sin and sorrow for it.'

Resolved upon the Q., 'As there is no sin so small but it is damnable, so there is no sin so great that [it] can damn those who truly repent.'

Resolved upon the Q., 'It is the duty of every minister of the gospel to preach the doctrine of repentance as well as of faith in Christ.'

Sess. 703.—September 10, 1646.—Thursday afternoon.

The Assembly entered upon the debate 'of Divorce;'
and upon debate it was

Debate of divorce.

Ordered—The title 'Of Divorce.'

Resolved upon the Q., 'Adultery or fornication committed after a contract, being detected before marriage, giveth just occasion to the innocent party to dissolve that contract.'

Resolved upon the Q., 'In the case of adultery after marriage, it is lawful for the innocent party to sue out a divorce.'

SESS. 703.
Sept. 10,
1646.

Resolved upon the Q., 'and upon the divorce to marry another as if the offending party were dead.'

Resolved upon the Q., These words shall be waived: 'Death doth so fully dissolve the bond of marriage that the surviving party may marry another.'

Resolved upon the Q., These words shall be waived: 'If either of the married persons forsake their yokefellow, and by no means that can be used by the party forsaken, or friends, or magistrate, will be reduced, after sufficient time set down by the magistrate, and made known to the party that so desireth, it is lawful for the innocent party to marry another.'

Resolved upon the Q., 'Wilful and obstinate desertion of one married party giveth just cause to the other, after all means used to reduce the offending person, to sue out a divorce and for liberty to marry another.'

Sess. 704.—September 11, 1646.—Friday morning.

Dr. Gouge and Mr. Marshall were appointed to pray with the Lords and Commons the week following.

Resolved upon the Q., The words shall stand without alteration. Mr. Whitakers enters his dissent.

Mr. Arrowsmith made report of Christian Liberty.

Ordered—That this report be taken into debate [on] Thursday in the afternoon.

Sess. 717.—Sept. 24, 1646.—Thursday morning.

The Assembly proceeded in debate of the Catechism. Catechism. The next question and answer, viz., Q. 'Are children also thus guilty of sin and corrupted with it? A. All children conceived in a natural way are conceived and born in sin, and so was I too,' was waived.

Resolved upon the Q., These words, 'being all conceived and born in sin,' shall be added to the answer last voted.

Resolved upon the Q., There shall be no addition.

Resolved upon the Q., This question and answer, viz. :—

'Q. If all mankind be thus corrupted, how comes any one to be better than another? A. It is God's grace only that makes one man better than another, restraining all and sanctifying some,' shall be waived in this place.

Resolved upon the Q., '33 Q. What is the punishment due to sin? A. The punishment due even to the least sin is death, together with all curses in this life and eternal damnation afterward.'

¹ In Fascicle III., the words objected to by Mr. Whitakers stand as they do now in the Confession of Faith, 'and some foreordained to everlasting death.'

Sept. 28,
1646.

The Assembly sat not this day, because there was not a full number. To those that were present, Dr. Burges made report that he had delivered part of the Confession of Faith to the House of Commons, according to the order of the Assembly.

Sess. 720.—Oct. 1, 1646.—Thursday morning.

Ordered—That a Duplicate of that part of the Confession of Faith sent to the House of Commons be sent to the House of Lords by the same Committee.¹

Resolved upon the Q., Mr. Marriot be approved upon his former examination.

at the door ; They were called in, and Dr. Burgesse acquainted the House, That according to the Order of this House to expedite the Confession of Faith and send in the same to this House, or so much thereof as was finished, the Assembly had diligently pursued that Order, and had commanded them to deliver in as much thereof as is already done, which was nineteen heads—the which he presented to the House.'

These heads were ordered to be read on Friday morning next ; and they were actually read on Friday, 9th October, and ordered to be printed.

“To the Right Honourable the House of Lords assembled in Parliament.

“The Humble Advice of the Assembly of Divines, by authority of Parliament sitting at Westminster, concerning part of a Confession of Faith ; being a duplicate of what was presented to the Honourable House of Commons on Friday last, September 25, 1646.” The said paper was read in part.'

The whole had been read a first and second time before November 6th, and under that date we have the farther entry in their Lordships' Journals (vol. viii. p. 588) :—'Next was read a third time that part of the Confession which was lately presented to this House from the Assembly of Divines as their Advice. And the question being put, “Whether to agree to the Confession of Faith now read?” It was Resolved in the Affirmative.'

Ordered—That the Confession of Faith now passed shall be sent down to the House of Commons, with this recommendation, 'That the Lords have received these Articles of Faith, which, after due consideration, they have passed, and desire the concurrence of the House of Commons therein ; it being necessary that the Protestant Churches abroad, as well as the people of this kingdom at home, may have knowledge how that the Parliament did never intend to innovate matters of Faith.' No definite action, however, was taken by the House of Commons till after the whole Confession had been presented.

¹ Accordingly, from 2d to 9th April, the penmanship and phraseology of the minutes, as given in the primary or original scroll, contained in the 3d fascicle of vol. iii. of the ms. in Dr. Williams' library, are markedly different from what they are under the preceding and subsequent dates; while again in the revised scroll, of which the present is a copy, some of the phraseology of these entries is altered, so as seemingly to make it more nearly conformable to what preceded and followed, and the penmanship throughout is obviously by the same hand. All these circumstances seem to confirm the prevalent belief, that certainly the whole of the 2d fascicle, and all but the whole of the others, are the work of Adoniram Byfield, the chief Scribe of the Assembly.—S.

Catechism.

Resolved upon the Q., Q. How doth it appear that the Scriptures are the word of God? A. The Scriptures manifest themselves to be the word of God by their majesty and purity; by the consent of all the parts, and the scope of the whole, which is to give all glory to God; by their light and power to convince and convert sinners, to comfort and build up believers unto salvation.

Upon debate about the next question, 'What is able fully to persuade the heart the Scriptures are indeed the word of God?' and the answer to it, it was Resolved upon the Q., Not to stand in two answers. Resolved to stand in one answer. Resolved upon the Q., This addition shall be made unto the former answer: 'But the Spirit of God bearing witness by and with the Scriptures in the heart of man, is alone able fully to persuade it that they are the very word of God.'

Ordered—Q. What do the Scriptures principally teach? A. The Scriptures principally teach, what man is to believe concerning God, and what duty God requires of man.

Resolved upon the Q., Q. What do the Scriptures make known of God? A. The Scriptures make known what God is, His properties, the persons in the Godhead.

Sess. 829. Resolved upon the Q., It shall be added, 'His decrees, and the execution of them.'

Ordered—Q. What is God? A. God is a Spirit, infinite in being and perfection.

Ordered—Q. Are there more Gods than one? A. There is but one only, the living and true God.

Resolved upon the Q., Q. What are the properties of God? A. God is almighty, all-sufficient, eternal, unchangeable, everywhere present, knowing all things, most wise, most holy, most just, most merciful and gracious, long-suffering, and abundant in goodness and truth.

(Sic) R. Resolved upon the Q., Q. How many persons are there in the Godhead? A. There be three persons in the Godhead, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost; and these three are one true, eternal God, equal in substance, power, and glory.

Resolved upon the Q., Q. What is proper to each of these persons? A. It is proper to the Father to beget the Son, and to the Son to be begotten of the Father, and to the Holy Ghost to proceed from the Father and the Son from all eternity. SESS. 828.

¹ They were presented to both Houses on 29th April. The Journals of the House of Lords simply bear that 'a message was brought from the Assembly of Divines by Dr. Smyth, etc., to present the proofs of Scripture upon which every Article of the Confession of Faith is grounded.' The Journals of the House of Commons contain the following more detailed account of the business:—'The House being informed that, according to the Order on Tuesday last, divers of the divines of the Assembly were at the door; They were called in, and Dr. Smyth acquainted the House that, according to two Orders that the divines of the Assembly had received from this House, he was commanded to present to this House the texts of Scripture applied to the Articles of the Confession of Faith, and the proceedings they have made upon the Nine-and-thirty Articles. Resolved, etc.—That on Wednesday next come sevensnight the first business, and nothing to intervene, the House do take into consideration the Confession of Faith, with the places of Scripture annexed, and the proceedings the divines have made in the Nine-and-thirty Articles. Ordered—That six hundred copies, and no more, of the Advice of the Assembly of Divines concerning the Confession of Faith, with the quotations and texts of Scripture annexed, presented to this House, and likewise six hundred copies of the proceedings of the Assembly of Divines upon the Nine-and-thirty Articles of the Church of England, be forthwith printed for the service of both Houses and of the Assembly of Divines; and the printer is enjoined at his peril not to print more than six hundred copies of each, or to divulge or publish any of them. It is further Ordered—That no person presume to reprint, divulge, or publish the said Advice or proceedings, or any part of them, till further order be taken by both or either of the Houses of Parliament. Ordered—That thanks be given to the Assembly of Divines for their great pains in these services. The divines of the Assembly were called in, and Mr. Speaker, by the command of the House, did accordingly give them thanks for their great pains in these services, and did acquaint them that this House had appointed a day to take into consideration the matters now presented, and had made an Order for their printing six hundred of each with all speed as may be' (vol. v. p. 156).

Ordered—Q. How doth God execute his decrees? A. God executeth his decrees in his works of creation and providence.

Ordered—Q. What is the work of creation? A. The work of creation is that wherein God did in the beginning, by the word of his power, make of nothing the world, and all things therein, for himself, within the space of six days, and all very good.

Resolved upon the Q., Q. How did God create the angels? A. God created all the angels spirits, holy, immortal, mighty in power, to execute his commandments, and to praise his name, yet subject to change.

Resolved upon the Q., Q. How did God create man? A. God on the sixth day formed man's body of the dust of the ground, breathed into it a living, reasonable, and immortal soul, made him after his own image in knowledge, righteousness, and holiness, with dominion over the creatures, yet subject to fall.

Ordered—Q. What are God's works of providence? A. God's works of providence are his most holy, wise, and powerful preserving and governing of all his creatures, ordering them, and all their actions, to his own glory.

Resolved upon the Q., Q. What is God's providence towards the angels? A. God by his providence permitted some of the angels to fall irrecoverably into sin and damnation, established the rest in holiness and happiness, employing them all at his pleasure in the administrations of his power, mercy, and justice.

Resolved upon the Q., Q. What is the providence of God towards man? A. The providence of God towards man is the preserving, governing, and ordering him in his several estates.

The Assembly proceeded in debate of the Catechism ; and upon debate it was Resolved upon the Q., Q. What was the providence of God towards man in his first estate? A. The providence of God towards man in his first estate was placing him in paradise, appointing him to dress it, giving him liberty to eat of the fruit of the earth, putting the creatures under his dominion, and ordaining marriage for his help : in affording him communion with himself, instituting the Sabbath, entering into a covenant of life with him, upon condition of personal, perfect, and perpetual obedience, of which the tree of life was a pledge, and forbidding to eat of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, upon pain of death.

Resolved upon the Q., Q. What estate did the fall bring mankind into? A. The fall brought mankind into an estate of sin and misery.

Resolved upon the Q., Q. What is sin? A. Sin is any want of conformity unto, and³ transgression of, the law of God, given as a rule to the reasonable creature.

Resolved upon the Q., Q. Wherein consisteth the sinfulness of that estate wherinto man fell? A. The sinfulness of that estate wherinto man fell, consisteth in the guilt of Adam's first sin, the want of that righteousness wherein he was created, and the corruption of his nature, whereby he is utterly indisposed, disabled, and made opposite unto all that is spiritually good, and wholly inclined to all evil, and that continually; which is commonly called Original Sin, and from which do proceed all actual transgressions.

Ordered—Q. What misery did the fall bring upon mankind? A. The fall brought upon mankind the loss of communion with God, his displeasure and curse; so as we are by nature children of wrath, bond slaves to Satan, and justly liable to all punishments in this world, and that which is to come.

Ordered—Q. What are the punishments of sin in this world? A. The punishments of sin in this world are either inward, as blindness of mind, a reprobate sense, strong delusions, hardness of heart, horror of conscience, and vile affections; or outward, as the curse of God upon the creatures for our sakes, and all other evils that befall us in our bodies, names, estates, relations, and employments, together with death itself.

Resolved upon the Q., Q. What are the punishments of sin in the world to come? A. The punishments of sin in the world to come, are everlasting separation from the comfortable presence of God, and most grievous torments, without intermission, in hell-fire for ever.

Resolved upon the Q., Q. Doth God leave all mankind to perish in the estate of sin and misery? A. God doth not leave all mankind to perish in the estate of sin and misery, into which they fell by the breach of the first covenant, commonly called the Covenant of Works, but of his mere love and mercy delivereth his elect out of it, and bringeth them into an estate of salvation by the second covenant, commonly called the covenant of grace.

Resolved upon the Q., Q. With whom was the covenant of grace made? A. The covenant of grace was made with Christ as the second Adam, and in him with all the elect as his seed.

Resolved upon the Q., Q. How is the grace of God manifested in the second covenant? A. The grace of God is manifested in the second covenant, in that freely offering life and salvation to sinners by Jesus Christ, and requiring of them faith in him and obedience to him, he giveth to

The Assembly proceeded in debate of the Catechism; and considering the question and answer recommitted [in] sess[ion] 834, it was Resolved upon the Q., Q. Did all mankind fall in the first transgression? A. The covenant being made with Adam as a publick person, not for himself only, but for his posterity, all mankind descending from him by ordinary generation, sinned in him, and fell with him in that first transgression.

Ordered—Q. Was the covenant of grace always administered after one and the same manner? A. The covenant of grace was differently administered under the Old Testament and under the New.

Resolved upon the Q., Q. How was the covenant of grace administered under the Old Testament? A. The covenant of grace was administered under the Old Testament by promises, prophecies, sacrifices, circumcision, passover, and other types and ordinances, which did all fore-signify Christ then to come, and were for that time sufficient to build up the elect in faith in the promised Messiah, by whom they then had full remission of sin, and eternal salvation.

Resolved upon the Q., Q. How was the covenant of grace administered under the New Testament? A. Under the New Testament, when Christ the substance was exhibited, the same covenant of grace was and still is to be administered in the preaching of the word, and the administration of the sacraments of baptism and the Lord's supper; in which grace and salvation is held forth in more fulness, evidence, and efficacy, to all nations.

Sic.

Resolved upon the Q., Q. Who is the Mediator of the covenant of grace? A. The only Mediator of the covenant of grace is the Lord Jesus Christ, who, being the eternal Son of God, of one substance and equal with the Father, in the fulness of time became man, and so was and continues to be God and man, in two entire distinct natures, and one person, for ever.

Resolved upon the Q., Q. How doth it appear that Jesus Christ is the very and true God? A. The Scriptures manifest that Jesus Christ is the very and true God, ascribing to him such names, attributes, works, and worship as are proper to God only.¹

Resolved upon the Q., Q. How did Christ, being the Son of God, become man? A. Christ the Son of God became man, by taking to himself a true body, and a reasonable soul, being conceived by the power of the Holy Ghost in the womb of the Virgin Mary, of her substance, and born of her, yet without sin.

An order was made authorizing Mr. Byfield, one of the Scribes, to receive the Revenues of the Archbishopric of Canterbury from the Trustees of London for the use of the Assembly. It is as followeth . . .

Resolved upon the Q., Q. Why was it requisite that the Mediator should be God and man in one person? A. It was requisite that the Mediator, who was to reconcile God and man, should himself be both God and man, and this in one person, that the proper works of each nature might be accepted of God for us, and relied upon by us, as the works of the whole person.

Ordered—Q. Why was our Mediator called Jesus? A. Our Mediator was called Jesus, because he saveth his people from their sins.

Ordered—Q. Why was our Mediator called Christ? A. Our Mediator was called Christ, because he was anointed with the Holy Ghost above measure, and so set apart, and fully furnished with all authority and ability, to execute the offices of prophet, priest, and king of his church, in the estate both of his humiliation and exaltation.

Resolved upon the Q., Q. How doth Christ execute the office of a prophet? A. Christ executeth the office of a prophet, in his revealing to the church, in all ages, by his Spirit and word, in divers ways of administration, the whole will of God, in all things concerning their edification and salvation.

The Assembly proceeded in debate of the Catechism, and upon debate it was Resolved upon the Q., Q. What is effectual calling? A. Effectual calling is the work of God's almighty power and grace, whereby (out of his free and special love to his elect, and from nothing in them moving him thereunto) he doth, in his accepted time, invite and draw them to Jesus Christ, by his word and Spirit, savingly enlightening their minds, renewing and powerfully determining their wills, so as they (although in themselves dead in sin) are hereby made willing and able freely to answer his call, and to accept and embrace the grace offered and conveyed in it.

Resolved upon the Q., Q. Are the elect only effectually called? A. All the elect, and they only, are effectually called, although others may be, and often are, outwardly called by the ministry of the word, and have some common operations of the Spirit, who, for their wilful neglect and contempt of the grace offered to them, being justly left in their unbelief, do never truly come unto Jesus Christ.

Sess. 855.

Resolved upon the Q., Q. What is justification? A. Justification is an act of God's free grace unto sinners, in which he pardoneth all their sins, accepteth and accounteth their persons righteous in his sight, not for anything wrought in them, or done by them, but only for the perfect obedience and full satisfaction of Christ, by God imputed to them, and received by faith alone.

Resolved upon the Q., Q. How is justification an act of God's free grace? A. Although Christ, by his obedience and death, did make a proper, real, and full satisfaction to God's justice in the behalf of them that are justified; yet inasmuch as God accepteth the satisfaction from a surety, which he might have demanded of them, [and] did provide this surety, his own only Son, imputing his righteousness to them, and requiring nothing of them for their justification but faith, which also is his gift, their justification is to them of free grace.

 and of the disability of himself and all other creatures to recover him out of his lost condition, not only assenteth to are not equally, so none of them are perfectly sanctified in this life ; but through the remnants of sin abiding in every part of them, and the perpetual lustings of the flesh against the spirit,¹ they are often foiled with temptations, and fall into many sins, are hindered in all their spiritual services, and their best works are imperfect and defiled in the sight of God.

SESS. 852.
May 31, 1647.

Resolved upon the Q., Q. May not true believers, by reason of their imperfection and the many temptations and sins they are overtaken with, fall away from the state of grace? A. True believers, by reason of the unchangeable love of God, and his decree and covenant to give them perseverance, their inseparable union with Christ, his continual intercession for them, and the seed of God abiding in them, can neither totally nor finally fall away from the state of grace, but are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation.

Resolved upon the Q., Q. Can true believers be infallibly assured that they are in the estate of grace, and that they shall persevere therein unto salvation? A. Such as truly believe in Christ, and endeavour to walk in all good conscience before him, may, without extraordinary revelation, by faith grounded [upon] the truth of God's promises, and by the Spirit enabling them to discern in themselves those graces to which the promises of life are made, and bearing witness with their spirits that they are the children of God, be infallibly assured that they are in the state of grace, and shall persevere therein to salvation.

Resolved upon the Q., Q. Are all true believers at all times assured of their present being in the state of grace, and that they shall be saved? A. Assurance of grace and salvation not being of the essence of faith, true believers may wait long before they obtain it ; and, after the enjoyment thereof, may have it weakened and intermitted, through manifold distempers, sins, temptations, and desertions ; yet are they never left without such a presence and support of the Spirit of God as keeps them from sinking into utter despair.

Resolved upon the Q., Q. By whom is the word of God to be preached? A. The word of God is to be preached only by such as being sufficiently gifted are duly approved and called unto that office.

Resolved upon the Q., Q. How is the word of God to be preached by those that are called thereunto? A. They that are called to labour in the ministry of the word are to preach sound doctrine, diligently, in season and out of season; plainly, not in the enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit, and power; faithfully, making known the whole counsel of God; wisely, applying themselves to the necessities and capacities of their hearers; zealously, with fervent love to God and the souls of his people; sincerely, aiming at his glory, and their conversion, edification, and salvation.

Resolved upon the Q., Q. What is required of those that hear the word preached? A. It is required of those who hear the word preached, that they attend upon it with diligence, preparation, and prayer, examine what they hear by the Scriptures, receive the truth with faith, love, meekness, and readiness of mind, as the word of God, meditate, and confer of it, hide it in their hearts, and bring forth the fruit of it in their lives.

Resolved upon the Q., Q. What is a sacrament? A. A sacrament is a holy ordinance instituted by Christ in his church, to signify and seal unto those that are in the covenant of grace, the benefits of his mediation to strengthen and increase their faith, and all other graces, to oblige

Resolved upon the Q., Q. How many sacraments hath Christ instituted in his church under the New Testament ? A. Under the New Testament, Christ hath instituted in his church only two sacraments, baptism and the Lord's Supper.

Resolved upon the Q., Q. What is baptism ? A. Baptism is a sacrament of the New Testament, wherein Christ hath ordained washing with water in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, to be a sign and seal of ingrafting into himself, of remission of sins by his blood and regeneration by his Spirit, of adoption, and resurrection unto everlasting life, and whereby the parties baptized are solemnly admitted into the visible church, and enter into an open and professed engagement to be wholly and only the Lord's.

Resolved upon the Q., Q. How is our baptism to be improved by us ? A. The needful but much neglected duty of improving our baptism is to be performed by us all our life long, especially in the time of temptation, and when we are present at the administration of it to others, by serious and thankful consideration of the nature of it, and of the ends for which Christ instituted it, the privileges and benefits conferred and sealed thereby, and our solemn vow made therein ; by being humbled for our sinful defilement, our falling short of, and walking contrary to, the grace of baptism, and our engagements ; by growing up to assurance of pardon of sins, and of all other blessings

The Assembly proceeded upon the debate of the Catechism ; and upon debate it was Resolved upon the Q., Q. What is the Lord's Supper? A. The Lord's Supper is a sacrament of the New Testament, wherein, by giving and receiving bread and wine according to the appointment of Jesus Christ, his death is showed forth ; and they that worthily communicate feed upon his body and blood, to their spiritual nourishment and growth in grace, have their union and communion with him confirmed, testify and renew their thankfulness, and engagement to God, and their mutual love and fellowship each with other, as members of the same mystical body.

Resolved upon the Q., Q. How hath Christ appointed bread and wine to be given and received in the sacrament? A. Christ hath appointed the ministers of the word, in the administration of the sacrament, to set apart the bread and wine from common use, by the word of institution, thanksgiving, and prayer : to take and break the bread, and to give both the bread and the wine to the communicants ; who are, by the same appointment, to take and eat the bread, and to drink the wine, in thankful remembrance that the body of Christ was broken and given, and his blood shed, for them.

Ordered—That the Committee for Mr. Hall do attend the Committee of the House of Peers according to the former instructions.

Sess. 862.—June 15, 1647.—Tuesday morning.

The Assembly proceeded in debate of the Catechism; and upon debate it was Resolved upon the Q., Q. What is the duty of Christians after they have received the sacrament of the Lord's Supper? A. The duty of Christians, after they have received the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, is seriously to consider how they have behaved themselves therein, and with what success; if they find quickening and comfort, to bless God for it, beg the continuance of it, watch against relapses, fulfil their vows, and encourage themselves to a frequent attendance on that ordinance: but if they find no present benefit, more exactly to review their preparation to, and carriage at, the sacrament, in both which, if they can approve themselves to God and their own consciences, they are to wait for the fruit of it in due time: but if they see they have failed in either, they are to be humbled, and to attend upon it afterwards with more care and diligence.

Resolved upon the Q., Q. Wherein do the sacraments of baptism and the Lord's Supper agree? A. The sacraments of baptism and the Lord's Supper agree, in that the author of both is God; the spiritual part of both is Christ and his benefits; both are seals of the same covenant, are to be dispensed by ministers of the gospel, and none other, and to be continued in the church of Christ until his second coming.

Resolved upon the Q., There shall be no addition about their succeeding the sacraments of the Old Testament.

Resolved upon the Q., Q. Wherein do the sacraments of baptism and the Lord's Supper differ? A. The sacraments of baptism and the Lord's Supper differ, in that baptism is to be administered but once, with water, to be a sign and seal of our regeneration and ingrafting into Christ, and that even to infants; whereas the Lord's Supper is to be administered often, in the elements of bread and wine, to represent and exhibit Christ as spiritual nourishment to the soul,² and to confirm our continuance and growth in him, and that only to such as are of years and ability to examine themselves.

Ordered—Mr. Ward, Mr. Calamy, Dr. Temple, Mr. Seaman, be added to the Committee concerning Mr. Hall.

Ordered—Mr. Wilmot bring the reasons of his remove.

Sess. 863.—June 16, 1647.—Wednesday morning.

Ordered—Mr. Richardson be examined.

The Assembly proceeded in debate of the Catechism; and upon debate it was Resolved upon the Q., Q. What is prayer? A. Prayer is an offering up of our desires unto God, in the name of Christ, by the help of his Spirit, with Informations were brought into the Assembly against Mr. Becke; and upon debate of them it was Resolved upon the Q., That it be certified to the Committee for Plundered Ministers that the Assembly is not satisfied concerning the fitness of Mr. Becke for this or any other ministerial charge.

Mr. Tuckney made report of some addition,² and moved for the Ten Commandments to be considered by those of the Committee that reside about Westminster; and it was ordered.

Upon some debate about Mr. Burney, it was Ordered—That Mr. Wi[l]son be written to about Mr. Burney, to make a return against to-morrow sevensnight.

The Assembly proceeded in debate of the Catechism; and upon debate it was Resolved upon the Q., Q. What is it to pray in the name of Christ? A. To pray in the name of Christ is, in obedience to his command, and in confidence on his promises, to ask mercy for his sake; not by bare mentioning of his name, but by drawing our encouragement to pray, and our boldness, strength, and hope of acceptance in prayer, from Christ and his mediation.

Ordered—Q. Why are we to pray in the name of Christ? SESS. 864.

A. The sinfulness of man, and his distance from God by reason thereof being so great, as that we can have no access into his presence without a mediator, and there being none in heaven or earth appointed to, or fit for, that glorious work but Christ alone, we are to pray in no other name but his only. June 17, 1647. Larger Catechism.

Ordered—Q. How doth the Spirit help us to pray? A. We not knowing what to pray for as we ought, the Spirit helpeth our infirmities by enabling us to understand both for whom, and what, and how prayer is to be made, and by working and quickening in our hearts (although not in all persons and at all times, in the same measure) those apprehensions, affections, and graces which are requisite for the right performance [of] that duty.

Ordered—Q. For whom are we to pray? A. We are to pray for the whole Church of Christ upon earth, for magistrates and ministers, for ourselves, our brethren, yea, our enemies, and for all sorts of men living, or that shall live hereafter, but not for the dead, nor for those that are known to have sinned the sin unto death.

Ordered—Q. For what things are we to pray? A. We are to pray for all things tending to the glory of God, the welfare of the Church, our own or others' good, but not for anything that is unlawful.

Resolved upon the Q., There shall be no addition.

Sess. 866.—June 21, 1647.—Monday morning.

Mr. Tuckney made report of the Catechism.

Ordered—Mr. Martin and Mr. Eldred be approved upon former examination.

The Assembly proceeded in the debate of the Catechism ; and upon debate it was Resolved upon the Q., Q. How is the Lord's Prayer to be used? A. The Lord's Prayer is not only for direction, as a pattern, according to which we are to make other prayers ; but may also be used as a prayer, so that it be done with understanding, faith, reverence, and other graces necessary to the right performance of the duty of prayer.

Resolved upon the Q., Q. Of how many parts doth the Lord's Prayer consist? A. The Lord's Prayer consists of three parts, a preface, petitions, and a conclusion.

Resolved upon the Q., Q. What doth the preface of the Lord's Prayer teach us? A. The preface of the Lord's Prayer (contained in these words, Our Father which art in heaven) teacheth us, when we pray, to draw near to God with confidence of his fatherly goodness, and our interest therein, with reverence, and all other childlike dispositions, heavenly affections, and due apprehensions of his sovereign power, majesty, and gracious condescension : as also, to pray with and for others.

Resolved upon the Q., Q. What do we pray for in the first petition? A. In the first petition (which is, Hallowed be thy name), acknowledging the utter insufficiency and indisposition that is in ourselves and all men to honour God aright, we pray that God would by his grace enable and incline us and others to know, to acknowledge, and highly to esteem him, his titles, attributes, ordinances, word, works, and whatever he is pleased to make himself known by, and to glorify him in thought, word, and deed; that he would prevent and remove atheism, ignorance, idolatry, profaneness, and whatsoever is dishonourable to him; and, by his overruling providence, direct and dispose of all things to his own glory.

Resolved upon the Q., Q. What do we pray for in the third petition? A. In the third petition (which is, Thy will be done on¹ earth, as it is in heaven), acknowledging that by nature we and all men are not only utterly unable and unwilling to know and do the will of God, but prone to rebel against his word, to repine and murmur against his providence, and wholly inclined to do the will of the flesh and of the devil, we pray that God would by his Spirit take away from ourselves and others all blindness, weakness, indisposedness, and perverseness of heart, and by his grace make us able and willing to know, do, and submit to his will in all things, with the like humility, cheerfulness, faithfulness, diligence, zeal, sincerity, and constancy, as the angels do in heaven.

The Assembly proceeded upon the debate; and upon debate it was Resolved upon the Q., Q. What do we pray for in the fourth petition? A. In the fourth petition (which is, Give us this day our daily bread), acknowledging that in Adam, and by our sins, we have forfeited our right to all the outward blessings of this life, and deserved not only to be wholly deprived of them by God, but to have them cursed to us in the use of them; and that neither they of themselves are able to sustain us, nor we to merit, or by our own industry to procure them, but prone to desire, get, and use them unlawfully: we pray for ourselves and others, that both they and we, waiting upon the providence of God from day to day in the use of lawful means, may, of his free gift, and as to his fatherly wisdom shall seem best, enjoy a competent portion of them; and have the same continued and blessed unto us in our holy and comfortable use of them, and contentment in them; and be kept from all things that are contrary to our temporal support and comfort.

Mr. Sedgwick made report of the seventh commandment. Mr. Tuckney made report of the Catechism.

The Assembly proceeded in debate of some things recommitted concerning Christ and the Holy Ghost; and upon debate it was Resolved upon the Q., Q. What benefits hath Christ procured by his mediation? A. Christ, by his mediation, hath procured redemption, with all the benefits of the covenant of grace.

Ordered—Q. How do we come to be made partakers of the benefits which Christ hath procured? A. We are made partakers of the benefits which Christ hath procured, by the application of them to us, which is the work especially of God the Holy Ghost.

Ordered—Q. How doth it appear that the Holy Ghost is the very and true God? A. The Scriptures manifest that the Holy Ghost is the very and true God, ascribing to him such names, attributes, works, and worship as are proper to God only.

Ordered—Q. Who are made partakers of redemption by Christ? A. Redemption is certainly applied, and effectually communicated, to all those for whom Christ hath purchased it, who are in time by the Holy Ghost enabled to believe in Christ according to the gospel.

Ordered—Q. What is the preface to the commandments?

A. The preface to the commandments is contained in these words: I am the Lord thy God, which hath brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage: wherein God manifests his sovereignty, as being Jehovah, the eternal, immutable, and almighty God, having his being in and of himself, and giving being to all his word¹ and works: and to be a God in covenant, as with Israel of old, so with all his people; who, as he hath brought them out of their bondage in Egypt, so he delivereth us from our spiritual thralldom; and that therefore we are bound to take him for our God alone, and to keep all his commandments.

Ordered—Q. Why are these words, 'before me,' added in the first commandment? A. These words, 'before me,' or before my face, are added in the first commandment to tell us that God, who seeth all things, takes special notice of, and is much displeased with, the sin of having any other god: that so it may be an argument to dissuade from it, and to aggravate it as a most impudent provocation; as also to persuade us to do as in his sight, whatever we do in his service.

NOTE.—This may be the most suitable place to relate the further proceedings of the two Houses, and those of the Scotch Assembly and Parliament, regarding the Confession of Faith.

It has been mentioned in the notes on pp. 291, 308, that on the 6th November 1646 the first nineteen chapters were passed by the House of Lords in the exact form in which they had been sent up by the Assembly of Divines. The Journals of that House (vol. ix. pp. 17 and 18) bear that on the 16th February 1646-7 'The Confession of Faith was read the second time; and the House was adjourned into a Committee during pleasure to read it in parts and consider of it. The first Chapter, being in number 20th, was agreed to. The 21st, of Religious Worship and the Sabbath-day, was agreed to. The 22d, of Lawful Vows and Oaths, was agreed to. The 23d, of the Civil Magistrate, was agreed to. The 24th, of Marriage, agreed to. The 25th, of the Church, agreed to. The 26th, of the Communion of Saints, agreed to. The 27th, of the Sacraments, agreed to. The 28th, of Baptism, agreed to. The 29th, of the Lord's Supper, agreed to. The 30th, of Church Censures, agreed to. The 31st, of Synods and Councils, agreed to. The 32d, of the Resurrection, agreed to. The 33d, of the Day of Judgment, agreed to. The House was resumed; and the said Confession was read entirely, and Resolved—To pass upon the Question.' The same day 'a message was sent to the House of Commons by Dr. Aylett and Dr. Heath to deliver to them the residue of the Confession of Faith with this sense, "That the Lords sent part of the Confession of Faith long since to the House of Commons, and have now passed this; to both which the Lords desire their speedy concurrence in regard of the Fast appointed by both Houses for heresies and schisms, which is to be on the 10th of March next, and [it] would seem strange if before that time a Confession of Faith, agreed to by both Houses, be not published to the kingdoms." This message was delivered to the House of Commons on Saturday, the 20th of February, and was ordered to be taken into consideration on the Friday following; and on the 29th April, when the Scripture proofs for the Confession were presented, it was resolved, as mentioned on p. 354 (note), that on Wednesday next come sevensnight the House should proceed to consider the Confession of Faith and the proceedings the Divines have made in the Nine-and-thirty Articles. But it was not till Wednesday, the 19th of May, that they were able to carry out this resolution. On that day 'the House, according to former Order, proceeded to the consideration of the humble Advice of the Assembly of Divines concerning a Confession of Faith, presented by the Assembly of Divines, with the texts of Scripture in the margin. The first paragraph of the first Chapter, concerning the Holy Scriptures, and likewise the Sixth Article of the Nine-and-thirty Articles, were read.' Almost the whole of this session was occupied with the consideration of chapter i., which was discussed, and put to the question paragraph by paragraph. A separate question was even put, whether the words, 'those former ways of God's revealing his will unto his people being now ceased,' should stand. Apparently without a division, 'it passed with the affirmative,' both as regards these, and also the whole of the 1st, 2d, 3d, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 9th, and 10th paragraphs of this chapter. But the 8th paragraph was respited, and ordered to be taken into consideration at the next sitting of the House on this business. This was on Friday, 28th May, when it was referred to those members of the House that were of the Assembly of Divines 'to confer with the divines of the Assembly upon the said paragraph, and to report it on Wednesday next.' At the same sitting, chapters ii. and iii. of the Confession were considered paragraph by paragraph, and adopted apparently without division. Owing to the political disturbances of that summer, it was not till the 2d of October that the House resumed consideration of the Confession, passed chapter iv. and part of chapter v., and resolved to go on every Wednesday till the whole was ended. But no further entry occurs on the subject in their Journals till the 4th February 1647-8, when they proceeded to consider of the 4th paragraph of chapter xx., entitled 'of Christian Liberty and Liberty of Conscience,' and resolved that that paragraph should be again 'taken into consideration when the House comes to consider of the Thirtieth Chapter, concerning Church Censures.' At the same sitting the House adopted, paragraph by paragraph, chapters xxi. and xxii., and the first three sections of chapter xxiii. Before the 4th section of that chapter was adopted, the phrase, 'pay them tribute and other dues,' was changed into 'pay them their dues;' and the words 'magistrate's' into 'magistrates,' 'him' into 'them,' and 'due' into 'just;' and the consideration of the clauses respecting the Pope's assumed power was deferred till the Thirtieth chapter should be considered. The first two sections of chapter xxiv., 'of Marriage and Divorce,' were also approved at the same sitting. On the 11th February, before the 3d section of that chapter was adopted, the qualified proposition, 'It is lawful for all sorts of people to marry who are able with judgment to give their consent,' was exchanged for the general one, 'It is lawful for all sorts of people to marry.' On the 18th of February the 4th section of this chapter was discussed clause by clause. The two first clauses were agreed to. But 'the question being put for agreeing to the last clause of the 4th paragraph . . . viz. "the man may not marry any of his wife's kindred nearer in blood than he may of his own; nor the woman of her husband's kindred nearer in blood than her own," the House was divided. The Yeas went forth—

Sir Robert Pye, . . .	{ Tellers for the Yea. }	} 40.
Sir Antony Irby, . . .	{ With the Yea, }

Sir William Armysn, {	Tellers for the No. }	} 71.
Mr. Knightley, . . . {	With the No, }

So that the question passed with the Negative.' The House resumed consideration of this chapter on 3d March; and the question being put for agreeing to the 5th paragraph, it passed with the Negative; and the question being put for agreeing to the 6th paragraph, it passed also with the Negative. On 10th March the House took into consideration, and adopted paragraph by paragraph, chapters xxv., xxvi., xxvii., xxviii., xxix., xxxii., and xxxiii. On 17th March the House resumed consideration of the 8th paragraph of chapter i., and agreed to it as originally framed by the Assembly. They next considered of the title to be given to the book, and 'the question being propounded, that these words, "A Confession of Faith," be in the question, the question was put whether this question shall be put; the House was divided. The Noes went forth—

Sir Richard Houghton, {	Tellers for the No. }	} 61.
Mr. Rous, {	With the No, }

Sir Walt. Erle, {	Tellers for the Yea. }	} 41.
Colonel Lee, {	With the Yea, }

So that the question passed with the Negative;’ and it was resolved that this shall be the title, ‘Articles of Christian Religion approved and passed by both Houses of Parliament, after advice had with the Assembly of Divines by authority of Parliament, sitting at Westminster.’ Conference was then desired with the Lords, who had passed the whole of the Confession in its original form, and apparently more than one conference took place. At the first of these, held on 22d March 1847–8, Rushworth states (Hist. Coll. Pt. iv. p. 1035) that the Commons ‘presented the Lords with the Confession of Faith passed by them, with some alterations, viz. That they do agree with their Lordships, and so with the Assembly, in the doctrinal part, and desire the same may be made public; that this kingdom and all the Reformed Churches in Christendom may see the Parliament of England differ not in doctrine. In some particulars there were some phrases altered, as in that of “tribute” being due to the magistrate, they put “dues;” to the degree of marriage they refer to the law established; particulars in discipline are recommitted; and for the title they make it not “A Confession of Faith,” because not so running I confess at the beginning of every section, but “Articles of Faith agreed upon by both Houses of Parliament,” as most suitable to the former title of the Thirty-nine Articles.’ It was not till 3d June 1648 that the House of Lords sent a message to the Commons to let them know that ‘they agreed to all the alterations in the Confession of Faith, excepting to that concerning marriage.’ And it was only on 20th June that the House of Commons took this message into consideration, and ‘Ordered—That the Articles of Christian Religion sent from the Lords with some alterations, the which were this day read, and upon the question agreed unto, be forthwith printed and published.’ Next day it was Resolved—That the texts of Scripture be printed with the Articles of Faith. This was accordingly done, and a copy of the authorized edition of these Articles is still to be found in the Library of the British Museum. It omits the whole of chapters xxx. and xxxi. of the Assembly’s Confession, also the 4th paragraph of chapter xx., and part of the 4th, and the whole of the 5th and 6th paragraphs of Chapter xxiv. The clause originally struck out of the 3d paragraph of that chapter by the Commons seems to have been the only one restored in consequence of the firmness of the House of Lords.

Nor was this the last word of an English House of Commons on the Confession of Faith. When the Long Parliament was restored in 1659, and the members who had been secluded in 1648 were recalled, a Committee on Religion was appointed, with Colonel Harley as Convener. This Committee, on 2d March 1659-60, reported, inter alia, 'the Confession of Faith presented from the Assembly of Divines by Dr. Burgess and others of the Assembly, the 25th September¹ 1646, which was read;' and it was thereupon 'resolved that this House doth agree to this public Confession of Faith contained in all the chapters except the 30th and 31st,' and also 'ordered that it be referred to the Committee which brought in this Confession of Faith to bring in an Act declaring and owning this to be the public Confession of Faith of the Church of England.'² It was further 'ordered that the 30th chapter, of Church Censures, and the 31st chapter, of Synods and Councils, be referred back to the same Committee that brought in the Confession of Faith to consider thereof, and to confer with such persons thereupon as they shall think fit, and present their opinion therein to the Parliament.'¹ On 5th March there was reported from the same Committee, 'An Act declaring the public Confession of Faith of the Church of England;' which having been read the first and second time, it was 'resolved that this Act be now read the third time. The said Act was read the third time accordingly, and upon the question passed, and ordered to be printed and published.' It was 'referred to Dr. Reynolds, Mr. Calamy, and Mr. Manton to examine the same at the press, and also to examine the Scriptures for proof of every article, and insert the same in the margin of the book.¹ On 14th March a bill was passed for the Presbyterian government of the Church, according to the ordinance of Parliament in 1648, entitled 'The Form of Church Government to be used in England and Ireland.'² Thus presbytery may be said to have been re-established, while by the resolution of the House of 21st May 1659 a considerable amount of liberty was reserved to 'tender consciences' differing from the form established.³

The proceedings of the Assembly and Parliament of Scotland may be more shortly related. The Confession of Faith, as printed without proofs in January 1646-7, was brought down by Baillie the same month, along with Rouse's Psalter, and presented by him to the Commission of the General Assembly.⁴ Some have supposed that it was forthwith printed and sent to the several presbyteries that they might report their opinion of it to the next General Assembly. I have not succeeded in finding any trace of such an edition, and I can hardly think that if copies had been issued and transmitted to presbyteries, the Assembly would have omitted to mention this fact in their Act, as explicitly as in the following year they mentioned the fact that the Larger Catechism had been so transmitted. In all probability they were induced to follow a more expeditious course than they otherwise would, by the assurances of their commissioners, that it would conduce much to ensure the adoption of the Confession in its entirety by the English Parliament, that it had been already received in this manner by the Assembly or Parliament of Scotland.⁵ The edition of the Confession, with proofs, printed at London in May, was probably brought down to Scotland by Gillespie before the meeting of the Assembly in 1647, and in Session V. of that Assembly orders were given for printing 300 copies for the use of the members of the Assembly.¹ In Sessions IV., XV., and XIX.,² all who had doubts or objections regarding any head or article of the Confession of Faith, were invited to state them to a special Committee of Assembly. Thus the objectors were satisfied, and in the XXIII. Session the Act approving of the Confession of Faith was passed nemine contradicente.³ This Act of Assembly, along with the Acts in approbation of the Larger and Shorter Catechisms passed in 1648, was ratified by the Scottish Parliament on 7th February 1649. That ratification of course was annulled by the general Act Rescissory of 1661; but [a certain degree of deference continued to be given to the Confession in the episcopal times.⁴ By Act V. of the Parliament of 1690 it was anew ratified and established as the public and avowed Confession of this Church, containing the sum and substance of the doctrine of the Reformed Churches, and by Act XXII. of Parliament 1693, the terms in which it was to be subscribed were appointed. A formula in the terms prescribed by this statute was adopted by the Assembly in 1694. In 1711 this was exchanged for the formula still in use. These Acts of Assembly and Parliament, or such parts of them as relate to the Confession of Faith, are subjoined, along with the formulæ of 1694 and 1711.

⁵ Accordingly an edition of the Confession, etc., as approved by the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, was published in London in 1648. The publisher was called to account by the House of Commons, who at once divined why this had been done. This edition was allowed to be circulated with a new title page; but its origin may still be traced by its peculiar readings derived from the Scotch edition of 1647.

being the chiefest part of that uniformity in religion which, by the Solemn League and Covenant, we are bound to endeavour : And there being accordingly a Confession of Faith agreed upon by the Assembly of Divines sitting at Westminster, with the assistance of Commissioners from the Kirk of Scotland ; which Confession was sent from our Commissioners at London to the Commissioners of the Kirk met at Edinburgh in January last, and hath been in this Assembly twice publickly read over, examined, and considered ; copies thereof being also printed, that it might be particularly perused by all the members of this Assembly, unto whom frequent intimation was publickly made, to put in their doubts and objections, if they had any : And the said Confession being, upon due examination thereof, found by the Assembly to be most agreeable to the Word of God, and in nothing contrary to the received doctrine, worship, discipline, and government of this Kirk : And, lastly, It being so necessary, and so much longed for, that the said Confession be, with all possible diligence and expedition, approved and established in both kingdoms, as a principal part of the intended uniformity in religion, and as a special means for the more effectual suppressing of the many dangerous errors and heresies of these times ; the General Assembly doth therefore, after mature deliberation, agree unto, and approve the said Confession, as to the truth of the matter ; (judging it to be most orthodox, and grounded upon the Word of God ;) and also, as to the point of uniformity, agreeing for our part, that it be a common Confession of Faith for the three Kingdoms. The Assembly doth also bless the Lord, and thankfully acknowledge His great mercy, in that so excellent a Confession of Faith is prepared, and thus far agreed upon in both kingdoms ; which we look upon as a great strengthening of the true reformed religion against the common enemies thereof. But, lest our intention and meaning be in some particulars misunderstood, it is hereby expressly declared and provided, That the not mentioning in this Confession the several sorts of ecclesiastical officers and assemblies, shall be no prejudice to the truth of Christ in these particulars, to be expressed fully in the Directory of Government. It is further declared, That the Assembly understandeth some parts of the second article of the thirty-one chapter only of kirks not settled, or constituted in point of government : And that although, in such kirks, a synod of ministers, and other fit persons, may be called by the magistrate's authority and nomination, without any other call, to consult and advise with about matters of religion ; and although, likewise, the ministers of Christ, without delegation from their churches, may of themselves, and by virtue of their office, meet together synodically in such kirks not yet constituted, yet neither of these ought to be done in kirks constituted and settled ; it being always free to the magistrate to advise with Synods of ministers and ruling elders, meeting upon delegation from their churches, either ordinarily, or, being indicted by his authority, occasionally, and pro re nata ; it being also free to assemble together synodically, as well pro re nata as at the ordinary times, upon delegation from the churches, by the intrinſical power received from Chriſt, as often as it is neceſſary for the good of the Church ſo to aſſemble, in caſe the magiſtrate, to the detriment of the Church, withhold or deny his conſent ; the neceſſity of occaſional aſſemblies being firſt remonſtrate unto him by humble ſupplication.

2. Act XVI. of Parliament 1649, anent the Catechiſms, Confession of Faith, and Ratification thereof:—

At EDINBURGH, February 7, 1649.

The Eſtates of Parliament, now preſently convened in this ſecond Session of the ſecond triennial Parliament, by virtue of an Act of the Committee of Eſtates, who had power and authority from the laſt Parliament for convening the Parliament, having ſeriously conſidered the Catechiſms, viz. the Larger and Shorter ones, with the Confession of Faith, with three Acts of Approbation thereof by the Commiſſioners of the General Aſſembly, preſented unto them by the Commiſſioners of the ſaid General Aſſembly ; do ratify and approve the ſaid Catechiſms, Confession of Faith, and Acts of Approbation of the ſame, produced as it is ; and ordains them to be recorded, publiſhed, and practiſed.

3. Excerpt from Act V. of Parliament 1690, ratifying the Confession of Faith, and ſettling Presbyterian Church Government:—

Our Sovereign Lord and Lady, the King and Queen's Majesties, and Three Eſtates of Parliament, conceiving it to be their bounden duty, after the great deliverance that God hath lately wrought for this Church and kingdom, in the firſt place to ſettle and ſecure therein the true Proteſtant religion, according to the truth of God's Word, as it hath of long time been professed within this land : As alſo the government of Chriſt's Church within this nation, agreeable to the Word of God, and moſt conducive to the advancement of true piety and godlineſs, and the eſtabliſhing of peace and tranquillity within this realm . . . Therefore their Majesties, with advice and conſent of the ſaid Three Eſtates, do hereby revive, ratify, and perpetually confirm all laws, ſtatutes, and Acts of Parliament made againſt Popery and Papiſts, and for the maintenance and preſervation of the true Reformed Proteſtant religion, and for the true Church of Chriſt within this kingdom, in ſo far as they confirm the ſame, or are made in favours thereof. Likeas they by theſe preſents ratify and eſtabliſh the Confession of Faith now read in their preſence, and voted and approved by them, as the public and avowed Confession of this Church, containing the ſum and ſubſtance of the doctrine of the Reformed Churches (which Confession of Faith is subjoined to this present Act). As also they do establish, ratify, and confirm the Presbyterian government and discipline, that is to say, the government of the Church by kirk-sessions, presbyteries, provincial synods, and General Assemblies, ratified and established by the 114 Act, Ja. VI. Parl. 12, anno 1592, entituled Ratification of the Libertie of the True Kirk, etc.

4. Excerpt from Act XXII. of Parliament 1693, for settling the quiet and peace of the Church :—

Our Sovereign^l Lord and Lady, the King and Queen's Majesties, with advice and consent of the Estates of Parliament, ratify, approve, and perpetually confirm the fifth Act of the second session of this current Parliament, entituled, Act ratifying the Confession of Faith and settling Presbyterian Church government in the whole heads, articles, and clauses thereof : And do further statute and ordain, that no person be admitted or continued for hereafter to be a minister or preacher within this Church, unless that he . . . do also subscribe the Confession of Faith ratified in the aforesaid 5th Act of the second session of this Parliament, declaring the same to be the confession of his faith, and that he owns the doctrine therein contained to be the true doctrine, which he will constantly adhere to : As likewise, that he owns and acknowledges Presbyterian Church government, as settled by the aforesaid fifth Act of the second session of this Parliament, to be the only government of this Church, and that he will submit thereto, concur therewith, and never endeavour, directly or indirectly, the prejudice or subversion thereof, etc.

5. Formula authorized by the Assembly of 1694 :—

I, _____, do sincerely own and declare the above Confession of Faith, approven by former General Assemblies of this Church, and ratified by law in the year 1690, to be the confession of my faith, and that I own the doctrine therein contained to be the true doctrine, which I will constantly adhere to ; as likewise, that I own and acknowledge Presbyterian Church government of this Church now settled by law, by kirk-sessions, presbyteries, provincial synods, and General Assemblies, to be the only government of this Church, and that I will submit thereto, concur therewith, and never endeavour, directly nor indirectly, the prejudice or subversion thereof ; and that I shall observe uniformity of worship and of the administration of all public ordinances within this Church, as the same are at present performed and allowed.

6. Formula enjoined by Act X., Assembly 1711 :—

I, _____, do hereby declare, that I do sincerely own and believe the whole doctrine contained in the Confession of Faith approved by the General Assemblies of this national Church, and ratified by law in the year 1690, and frequently confirmed by diverse Acts of Parliament since that time, to be the truths of God ; and I do own the same as the confession of my faith : As likewise I do own the purity of worship presently authorized and practised in this Church, and also the Presbyterian government and discipline now so happily established therein ; which doctrine, worship, and Church government I am persuaded are founded on the Word of God, and agreeable thereto : And I promise that, through the grace of God, I shall firmly and constantly adhere to the same, and to the utmost of my power shall, in my station, assert, maintain, and defend the said doctrine, worship, discipline, and government of this Church, by kirk-sessions, presbyteries, provincial synods, and General Assemblies ; and that I shall in my practice conform myself to the said worship, and submit to the said discipline and government, and never endeavour, directly nor indirectly, the prejudice or subversion of the same ; and I promise that I shall follow no divisive course from the present establishment in this Church, renouncing all doctrines, tenets, and opinions contrary to or inconsistent with the said doctrine, worship, discipline, or government of this Church.

Between Fascicles II. and III. is a torn sheet of paper not fastened into the book, containing a number of miscellaneous jottings by the Scribe—chiefly the names of presentees who were to be examined, and of those who were to examine them, or of those who had lodged caveats against them. Fascicle III. extends from f. 239 to 382 of the volume, and contains the scroll minutes or rough jottings of the Assembly's proceedings from Session 604 to Session 1163, when the sessions ceased to be numbered, and thence onward to March 25, 1652, when their sittings as an examining board also ceased. All is in the handwriting of Byfield, save the minutes of sessions at which he was not present. The facts that the minutes on these occasions are in another hand, as well as that the minutes of the earlier sessions in the Fascicle frequently contain extensive notes of the speeches delivered in the debates, seem to make it probable that these rough jottings were taken down during the several sessions, and along with the recollections of the Scribe were the source from which the more finished and generally fuller minutes in Fascicle II. were framed. It has not been deemed necessary, therefore, to give the minutes in this Fascicle from Sessions 604 to 900, save when they contain notes of speeches made in the debates, or some information not given in the previous Fascicle or the notes upon it. The minutes from Sessions 900 to 1163 are given in full. Folio 239, besides a number of miscellaneous jottings similar in character to those on the torn leaf which precedes it, and two or three partial lists of members of Assembly, or of Committees of Assembly, contains in a later hand the words 'SESSIONS 604 to 1164,' which were probably meant as a title to the Fascicle, though, as stated above, Session 1163 is the last which bears a number.

Proceed in debate.

Mr. Coleman—The first thing offered was this: No jurisdictional power here expressed; proved by parallel scriptures. To those they answered Deut. xvii. 12. To this said: This did not do any such thing, be[cause] no mention who should put him to death. A. Two words following show it, 'you shall take away evil.' For 2 Thess. ii. 14, the power is placed in the Church, to this it was said: he yields excommunication. A. I speak here according to your opinion . . . Said it will not follow, no censure because no authority . . . Those texts Tit. and Pet. there is the word 'obey' and 'submit,' which is not in the other place . . . A doctrinal declarative power is granted . . . 2d arg. 'let him be to thee.' Said then a private person might have more privilege than a church wronged . . . A. This is denied . . . Here is no more power in the church over the per . . . 3d a[rg.] 'a publican and heathen.' This would not be an ecclesiastical censure. A publican was an Israelite, and admitted to the ordinances. Said the publicans were not admitted to the ordinances; another said, de facto they were admitted. When those [2] were agreed which they will stand to I will answer them. Said, they must not be taken disjunctive[ly] but copulatively; let them agree . . . Said the least weight put upon the word publican, but why less weight upon that . . . 4 [arg.] For the contradiction of this scripture to that in those . . . Said that was not formally excommunication . . . To reconcile the Scriptures said, excommunication major and minor . . . It is true something spoken concerning the matter that it was not civil but ecclesiastical. A. For the present I say only, this is not to the argument . . . Said all fathers (?)¹ from the beginning of the world did interpret this place thus . . . But what if they did not, was not that too confident an if,¹ for some others interpret this of a particular person. Any particular person may bind and loose, and Augustine . . . 2. Some say this is a private injury, Theophylact on 18th of Matth. . . this is only a ministerial power by preaching, Jerome upon Esa. lib. 6, cap. 14 . . . Tertullian, Act 2 (?).

SESS. 604.

Mr. Palmer—We did say the scope of our Saviour in this place is not to make a particular reparation, but to bring the party to repentance.

Mr. Coleman—Grant it for the present, that here is no authoritative power in case he did not repent . . .

Mr. Scaman—Only take up that that hath reference to that that concerns myself. He need not have searched

‘I might cite Tertullian, Cyprian, Augustine, Chrysostom, Theophylact, Hieronymus, and all modern interpreters, both popish and orthodox, for this interpretation, not any of them dreaming of the insolent opinion of Erastus, who misapplieth Augustine and Theophylact for his own way, as Beza cleareth.’—Rutherford's Divine Right of Church Government, p. 237.

‘That this power is juridical or forensical . . . I do the rather observe, because Erastus and Grotius allege some of the ancients for their exposition of Matth. xviii. 18, that this binding or loosing is by the offended brother. That which Augustine, Origen, and Theophylact say of one brother's binding or loosing is but spoken tropologically, and not as the literal sense of the text ; yea, Theophylact, in that passage cited by Erastus and Grotius, doth distinguish between the ministerial or ecclesiastical binding and loosing and the party offended his binding and loosing : “non enim solum quæ solvunt sacerdotes sunt soluta sed quæcunque et nos,” etc. Theophylact doth also find excommunication in that text. . . . I further appeal to Augustine himself, Epist. 75, where, speaking of excommunication and anathema, he distinguisheth it from corporal punishment ; and after he hath spoken of the temporal sword, he addeth : “Spiritualis autem pœna quæ fit quod scriptum est, quæ ligaveris in terra erunt ligata in celo animas obligat.” . . . Again, in his 6th tome, lib. i., contra adversarium legis et prophetarum, cap. 17, he doth most plainly interpret Matth. xviii. 18 of church discipline and binding by censure. Hierome, both in his commentary on Matth. xviii. and in his [1st] epistle to Heliodorus, speaketh of this power of binding as a judicial forensical power belonging to the ministers or officers of the Church.’—Gillespie's Aaron's Rod Blossoming, B. III. ch. 6, pp. 409, 410. He refers for additional authorities to Bishop Bilson's Perpetual Government of Christ's Church.

those authors. That which he should have proved is, that the censure of the Church is no other, but the same that a private person . . . If both the opinions of some of the members do militate against him, he should have answered both.

Mr. Coleman— . . .

Mr. Gillespie—Many things replied unto he hath not answered to . . . As for that no censure expressed. If that be all the reply, that [it] doth not express it; 'thou' is in Math. 18, but it is not said 'thou' is the judge or the civil magistrate . . . Said to thee . . . I replied . . . 1. This place must be understood of the judgment of the Church as well as of a single person, otherwise Christ would have contradicted judgments to be in the Church. 2. I answered by an argument that Erastus useth. He proves that the whole Church should forgive be[cause] commanded to one person. 3. By a necessary consequence from the text, if Christ laid so m[uch] weight in the case of a private offence—an offender being contumacious—then much more when the whole Church is offended. If he but grant that the Church hath as much power as one single person, then . . . For his third argument if any power of Church censure, then heathens and publicans were secluded from the public ordinances. I marvel he hath not brought a proof of it . . . For his testimonies he will gain little, if he will but stand to their testimonies we shall soon . . .

Mr. Coleman—For that of Deut. it is not fixed who is this 'thou.'

Mr. Gillespie—By xvii. of Deut. he makes the Sanhedrim at Jerusalem to have no more power, but doctrinally to admonish.

Mr. Coleman—They had in other cases.

Mr. Maynard—This a cause of great expectation and consequence. Let him answer what he thinks fit.

Mr. Gillespie—But the Q[uestion] is whether xvii. of Deut. do not prove the supreme power of the Sanhedrim; if it do prove the supreme authority of the Sanhedrim. . . .

Mr. Coleman—I do not bring this to prove the authority of the Sanhedrim, but of the inferior court. I acknowledge the supreme power of the Sanhedrim, and in this place the supreme directive power.

SESS. 604.
Mar. 16,
1645.

Mr. Gillespie—If only a directive power, then he that will not hear the directive power then he must die.

Mr. Coleman—For that 2d ‘to thee.’ To this 2 things replied. To the first I answer, this supposeth the Q. . . . Otherwise, what inconvenience will follow from it, but, make what other course thou canst to get satisfaction without offence to the Church.

Mr. Coleman—I will prove that heathen and publican is not a Church censure, not ecclesiastical. 3 things: 1. Because in Math. and in Luke it is always said offend thee or sinned against thee. 2. It is a particular injury, be-[cause] the particular person hath power to forgive him. 3. Can this of 70 times 7 times hold good in an ecclesiastical censure?

Mr. Palmer—He doth not speak to that we desire he should speak to, that it is not to bring a man to repentance.

Dr. Gouge—Those of Luke and Matth[ew] are two stories, and not spoken at the same time to the same end.

Mr. Gillespie—The meaning of ‘trespass against thee’ is only if he scandal thee. There is nothing (?) in the xviii. of Matth. of private offences but of scandals . . . ‘Gain’ is meant of gaining his soul. All that in Luke is another passage which this is not parallel unto.

Mr. Seaman—This argument is very good if he can make it out . . . Suppose not of ecclesiastical then either moral proceeding betwixt man and man, or civil proceeding before civil judicatories . . . He saith ‘sin against thee.’ That relates to that sin Christ speaks of in the chapter.

Mr. Coleman—All the answer is upon a positive interpretation of Scripture he himself gives. I desire him to make this out that the word ‘to sin against thee’ is interpretable this way.

Mr. Palmer—I Cor. viii. 10, 11, 12.

Mr. Calamy—The words are preceptive. Christ hath not laid a command upon any to speak with the brother before he go to law with him, etc.

Mr. Gillespie—Will he deny but a scandalous sin is a — is meant of private injuries.

Mr. Coleman—That place quoted hath such a sensible difference as that it cannot be parallel.

Mr. Maynard—xvii. of Luke is agreed to be of a particular injury, and yet the word is the same in both.

Mr. Vines—That which he did demand was where the phrase is so anywhere used. True the word may be so taken, yet in the very notation of the word there is some reference to God in which respect it is called a sin. The brethren of Joseph are said to have sinned against Joseph, Gen. xlii. 22, so Jonathan to David, 1 Sam. x.¹ . . . Though the matter be different, yet the phrase is the same, and that it must be the meaning in this text is very probable. Christ doth not here set up any political laws ; he hath not ordinarily done so, but he sets up that that should obtain in his Church . . . The first word seems to be of some weight, but if thy brother ;—17, 18, Christ speaks of those that give scandal, and having done with that he comes to speak of those that receive the scandal.

Dr. Temple—1 Cor. ix. 19 ; 1 Pet. iii. 1 . . . The fathers have all gone upon this in their interpretations of this place . . . Grotius is clear that this place proves an endeavour to bring a man to repentance.

Mr. Maynard—To propound my own doubts : I am at the same stay now both for the matter before you and for the manner of proceeding in it . . . all the weight of the argument for jurisdiction lies in the latter end of it . . . Observe to what end, in what sense, this brought in, whether this such a truth as to be an article of Faith. Then the question is whether proves it be such a truth as makes it to be an article of Faith . . . It's not enough to say this text may signify, but he must say it must signify a public scandal . . . There is much said to prove that it may signify otherwise . . . Said this was not so much giving a rule in the particular comparison directly as a heathen or publican, but as we express it . . . So then it is not related to the condition of a heathen and publican, and so there is nothing of religion to be gathered from it . . . Some take this place as relating to civil injury. A heathen might not be sued by the Romans, nor a publican, being a privileged person . . . Others as a direction either [for] an injury or scandal; where it is a scandal, satisfaction as to a scandal, if not tell it more publicly . . . The last is the thing in question before you. For that of 'gained thy brother,' admit it do signify by repentance, must that drive it into a jurisdiction; as put a case, a man make a profession of religion and doth me some great injury . . . Said do we think that Christ had care of . . . It is not a good way of argument to say, Do we think that Christ would do so or so? we must think well of it,¹ Christ did . . . For that of the Corinthians . . . Taking the state of it to be this: taken as an article of Faith, it is rather you do not propound the Church hath this and this government, but it hath a government, and this is it. This rather a way of inquiry by dispute as an advantage, and the rather pressed to speak this to you. If you had set² before this, you mean by the Church this and by the government this . . . You seem to dig a sawpit, wherein both parties fight together, can never be reconciled . . . The rent that this will make . . . Those that do differ from you you cannot admit.

Mr. Rouse—I think he hath not put you out of the way yet, nor will you turn out of the way you are in. Your work is to go forwards and examine by this and other texts whether there be a discipline or no in this text; you cannot carry many things to a civil court.

Mr. Maynard—He did oppose the opinion I did not hold. For that of politic ends . . . I think there's a Christian policy as well as Christian simplicity. If you should say it is not jure divino, I think it is something.

Mr. Palmer—Three things he is pleased to speak: 1. The difficulty of putting this question into the Confession of Faith . . . For the second, the thing that we have before us hath a double consideration . . .

² Perhaps 'said.'

Mr. Ley offered a scruple about binding and loosing . . .

[Blank space in MS.]

Mr. Ny—I speak if there be any terms obscure, we may have liberty to it.¹ You may assert an ecclesiastical jurisdiction and the kinds of church officers, and that jure divino.

Sir John Cooke—You say if any terms fit to be explained. This word church is of several senses: whether the visible Church, elected and not elected, and whether the Church reputed (?) be in the same sense? . . .

Mr. Gillespie—In divinity the word church may have many senses, but not here; it's a visible ministerial Church.

Sir John Cooke—I am satisfied . . . Whether Christ be in the New Testament named the king and head of a visible political ministerial Church?

Mr. Gillespie—That is a question worthy of debate² . . . The kingly office of Christ proved both in Old and New Testament; Christ is called the king of the house of Jacob . . . and head of the Church . . . In what relation is Jesus Christ a prophet in the Church, in the same relation he is a king; his kingly is to add efficacy to his prophetic . . . Christ is a prophet not only to [the] elect, but to the visible, political, and ministerial Church. There is a place in the Gospel which I think holds out this business: 'not see death till the kingdom of God come;' some interpret it of the government of the Church, and the sending forth the apost[les] and other ministers to rule the Church;

Dr. Burges—‘King and head,’ if we speak of [such] a head as hath an influence . . . but if we speak of a head as the New Testament doth, then though he be a head to the body, yet he is Head over all . . .

Mr. Seaman—He desires to know where Christ is called king and head of a political body. Christ is king and head of the Church as visible and as visibly political . . . That Christ is the king of his Church is express Zech. ix. 9: and he did truly act the part of a king without leave from the Roman empire; acted in the Temple . . . ‘The kingdom of God is within you.’ Some say this relates only to the internal kingdom, but it is clear, by all the force of the text, that it comes not by observation, because it is with you or amongst you, though you speak of it as yet to come. [He is prophesied of] as king to the Church of the Jews—‘thy king cometh’—therefore king of the Church visible; so that 1 Cor. xi. ‘Christ the head of every man.’ This is understood politically, for the husband is not a natural head of the wife, but in reference to order . . . It is one of the great arguments against Popery and Prelacy. They were a power in the Church of Christ that did not flow from Jesus Christ [as king]. Go, ‘teach and baptize.’ That implies a policy; they cannot do it, but called to it . . . No man can exercise this office but by delegation from Jesus Christ; he is the proton decticon of all church power . . . under Jesus Christ.

Sir John Cooke—I intended not a dispute, but only to understand what you did intend about the Church.

Mr. Ny—Offered ‘whether any Scripture;’ I suppose there are 2 or 3 Scriptures; all those terms of relation between Christ and his Church as head and members, root and branch, foundation and building . . . Eph. ii. 21. 1 Cor. xii. 27.

Dr. Temple—One place more to add—Eph. iv. 12. This must be meant of the visible body of Christ. . . . I cannot take those words¹ in the sense of a visible Church; I take ¹ i.e. Eph. ii. 21, or perhaps Eph. i. 22.

SESS. 606. it in a larger sense ; over all the Church whether militant
 Mar. 18, or triumphant ; Church in the second place must needs be

Mr. Gillespie—I offer this further for clearing that word. Some places that tell us of those that were types of Christ as king, if we compare the type with antitype [throw light on the nature of his kingdom], as David had a visible administration . . . so Solomon ; Eliakim a type of Christ as a ruler¹ . . . a parallel betwixt Christ and Moses, Heb. iii. ; 2 Cor. v. 20 if [ministers are] ambassadors for Christ to the visible Church, then Christ is a king to a ministerial Church . . . Rom. xii. ; 1 Cor. xii.—both these places show that the Church visible is the body of Christ ; he speaks of such a Church wherein there are divers administrations.²

Mr. Henderson—I remember one testimony of learned and judicious Bucer. He wrote 2 books, de Regimine Christi. He that is lawgiver is King, so is Christ . . . and . . .

Mr. Marshall made report of a petition to be presented from this Assembly to the Hon^{ble} Houses of Parliament : it was read, [and after some few alterations agreed to].¹

Sess. 609.—March 23, 1645.—Monday morning.

The Assembly adjourned to carry the petition and meet again.

Mr. Marshall informed the Assembly they had presented it to the House of Commons ; they have appointed Friday next to take our petition into consideration, both for the matter of doing (?) it and manner of bringing it in ;² and

¹ See p. 209 and note, where the petition has already been given.

² ' It is Resolved, etc., That on Friday next the House do take this petition into consideration, both concerning the manner of the coming of it in, and the matter of it, and what is fit to be done upon it ' (Journals of House of Commons, vol. iv. p. 485). On Friday, in accordance with the above resolution, it was agreed that the House ' be resolved into a Grand Committee on Wednesday morning next, to take into consideration the manner of the bringing in of the petition . . . and likewise the matter of it, and [to] have power to propound to the divines what questions they shall think fit, and receive their answer in writing thereunto ' (p. 492). This Grand Committee met on the 1st, 3d, and 8th of April, but apparently without being able to come to full agreement ; and accordingly, on the 9th April, it was ' Ordered,—that to-morrow morning Mr. Speaker do take the chair at eight of the clock, and that the House do resume to themselves the consideration of the petition last presented from the Assembly of Divines, in the same manner as it was formerly referred to the Grand Committee of the whole House ' (p. 503). On the 11th the House, according to order, took into consideration the petition, and by a majority of 88 to 76, resolved, ' That this petition thus presented by the Assembly of Divines is a breach of privilege of Parliament,' and ' That the House do on Wednesday next take into consideration in what fitting and fair manner this vote shall be communicated to the Assembly of Divines, and what is further fit to be done upon it ' (p. 506). On the 16th of April the House resolved, ' That a Committee be nominated to state the particulars of the breach of privilege in the petition from the Assembly of Divines upon the debate had in the House, and to present them to the House, that upon their approbation they may be presented to the Assembly of Divines.' The Committee consisted of Sir Harry Vane, junior, Mr. Selden, Sir John Evelyn of Wilts, Mr. Solicitor, Mr. Holles, Sir Arthur Haselrigge, Mr. Maynard, Mr. Nathaniel Fiennes, Mr. Whitelock, Mr. Hodges, Mr. Sergeant Wilde, Sir Thomas Widrington, Mr. Samuel Browne, Mr. John Stephens, Mr. Ashurst, Mr. William Lewes, Mr. Marten, Sir Peter Wentworth, Sir John Coke, Sir William Masham,

Debate of Religious Worship and finished.

Mr. Recorder, Sir Henry Vane, Mr. Rouse, Mr. Prideaux, Mr. Lisle, Mr. Ellis, Mr. Knightley, Sir Gilbert Gerard ; and Sir Arthur Haselrigge and Mr. Marten were to have the care of it. It was some days before the Committee reported ; but on the 17th the House thought fit, for their own vindication against the Assembly, the city, and the Scotch, to make a declaration 'of their true intentions concerning the ancient and fundamental government of the kingdom, the government of the Church, the present peace, securing the people against all arbitrary government, and maintaining a right understanding between the two kingdoms of England and Scotland, according to the Covenant and treaties' (p. 513). In this declaration they assert, that to concede the demands of the Assembly would be to grant 'an arbitrary and unlimited power and jurisdiction to near ten thousand judicatories to be erected within the kingdom,' and to set aside its fundamental laws, which devolve supreme jurisdiction on the Parliament. They further assert, that their '[un]willingness to subject themselves and the people of the land to this vast power, hath been a great cause that the government hath not been long since established,' and that they had 'the more reason by no means to part with this power out of the hands of the civil magistrate,' because experience manifests 'that the reformation and purity of religion, and the preservation and protection of the people of God in this kingdom, hath under God been by the Parliament, and their exercise of this power.' What the Presbyterians thought fit to say in reply to this charge may be seen in Gillespie's Aaron's Rod Blossoming, or the Divine Order of Church Government Vindicated, book III. ch. iii. p. 177 (ed. 1646) : 'I dare confidently say, that if comparisons be rightly made, Presbyterial government is the most limited and least arbitrary government of any other in the world.' After entering into details to make good this assertion in regard to the Papal and Prelatical forms of government, he proceeds (p. 189) to maintain that the Independents, who exempted single congregations 'from being accountable to and censurable by classes and synods, must needs be supposed to exercise much more unlimited or arbitrary power than the Presbyterial churches do, especially when this shall be compared and laid together with one of their three grand principles, which disclaimeth the binding of themselves for the future unto their present judgment and practice, and avoucheth the keeping of this reserve to alter and retract. By which it appeareth, that their way will not suffer them to be so far . . . bounded within certain particular rules (I say not with others, but even among themselves) as the Presbyterian way will admit of.' Finally, he denies, that in claiming a distinct government for the Church, the Presbyterians meant to deprive the Christian magistrate of that power and authority in matters of religion which the word of God and the Confessions of the Reformed Churches recognised as belonging to him. On the contrary, he maintains (p. 182), that not only in extraordinary cases, 'when Church government doth degenerate into tyranny, ambition, and avarice,' or those who manage it make defection from the truth, the Christian magistrate may and ought to 'do divers things in and for religion, and interpose his authority divers ways, so as doth not properly belong to his cognizance, decision, and administration ordinarily, and in a well-constituted Church,' but also that in ordinary cases he is free to act as his own conscience directs, in giving or refusing his sanction to the discipline of the Church; and that if he is offended at any sentence given by its Courts, 'they ought to be ready to give him an account of their proceedings, and by all means to endeavour to satisfy his conscience, or otherwise to be warned or rectified if themselves have erred.'

They were called in, and the Prolocutor [said] by order of the Assembly: Honoured senators and worthy citizens of that renowned city, it is not only a great content, but an addition to our happiness, to see the sense of God's great and wonderful mercies to this kingdom, Parliament, city, and this Assembly, to have so vigorous an operation upon your hearts as to take all ways for promoting that which is only due to God, the Author of this happiness, and to use all means for begetting a right understanding between the Parliament and city—people of God. We cannot but be thankful unto God, that hath put it into your hearts to make it a part of your request that God may have His due, and it is our part to promote it with all due means, as . . . that God, in regard of His truth and honour, may not in the least degree suffer. God hath made that honoured city great instruments . . . It is indeed a great honour that the city will be pleased to give us such an honourable invitation. We accept it with all thankfulness, and desire you will accept it, and be our mouths. As for peace, truth, and unity, it hath been our care; that prayer which you were pleased to make we cannot but heartily say Amen to it, and entreat you to pray that prayer of Him for us, not that we doubt of it, but we value the prayers of God's people . . . We are as you are, labouring in our spheres as you in yours . . . Debate of the proposition concerning the Church.

Mr. Lightfoot.—I dare not purposely oppose it and contrary it, because I know the consent of so many learned men. I desire to propound my doubts. 1. Because I find not any plain footsteps in Scripture for such a distinction of ecclesiastical and civil . . . and [2] because the grounds you go upon are not convincing . . . No such distinction in the Old Testament. It was ever in one hand, the first form¹ in the family was both Priest and Prince; it is confessed by the Christian doc[tors?]; it is generally held so by the Jews . . . Both ministry and magistracy was then in one hand in the times of the law, where was a distinction of functions, yet no distinction of government . . . partly by consideration of the proprieties of the priesthood, they consisted in offering sacrifices and incense, in praying for the people, propounding the law, in judging of the leprosy. In all those I see no sign nor glimpse at all of government, and in those things you count (?) ecclesiastical, as trial of heresy . . . those were indifferently administered by others as well as the priest . . . I deny not but there was a 3 fold Sanhedrim² . . . another of 23 in the gate of the house, and 23 in the gate of the mount; but all those were mixed. There was not one that³ was a civil and ecclesiastical court . . . And in the New Testament the elders of the people had their votes in trial of heresy as well as the priests, and did join together in that judicature, and for those things most ecclesiastical as excommunication ; in the Jewish authors excommunication was of a civil import. 1. Because it was indifferently administered, [by] the civil officer as well as the ecclesiastical, and for the loosing of excommunication there was the like indifferency . . . [2] Where binding and loosing is spoken concerning persons? It is not whomsoever you bind, but whatsoever . . . If one place in any Rabbinic author where this is taken in reference to persons it would sway my mind . . . Maimonides applies it to the permission or restriction of such a thing in the law ; so in the 6th of Deut. ;

in the . . . agreeable to speech of Christ to the apostles, they did act and had a necessity of such a commission as this . . . Something in Moses' law was to stand and some things to fall : Whatsoever you prohibit to be used, and whatsoever you shall enlarge in the law, you shall have the assistance of the spirit. . . . Their other text I shall crave respite, [as I have not my notes by me].¹

Mr. Price—I suppose all that he spake till he came to that text in Matthew, is not to the proposition . . . If we begin with the government in families. This is so far from excluding ministers from spiritual as that it rather entitles them to civil. For the proprieties of the priest's power he was to judge, and so may the minister I think . . . For the Sanhedrim's there hath been a large dispute in the Assembly . . . For that of excommunication, a civil thing, amongst the Jews he doth affirm it ; however it might be when it was purely judicial, yet that will be no good argument now for Christians . . . For that place in Matth[ew], the keys of the kingdom of heaven . . . For the person Peter, he thinks it was confined to himself. I know he . . . What is spoken to one is afterwards enlarged . . . Is it not of things in reference to persons ?

Mr. Seaman—He speaks of his not having of his notes by him . . . For the Old Testament . . . Those things he argues out of, both do confirm me. Said there was but one government. This is advantageous. Whatsoever that kingdom of Israel was in the whole of it, it was a type of the kingdom of Christ. At the end all the governments of the world shall resolve themselves into the government and kingdom of Christ . . . That that he should prove is that the priest had no government . . . He instances in the priest's work, but he leaves out that which is the main in the 17th of Deut. in case of appeals . . . I desire he would not only look to the history of the Old Testament, but the prophecies of the Old Testament as of another kingdom . . . For the New Testament, he runs upon the exposition of the Rabbins. I desire him to consider whether this be a safe principle to go upon in exposition of Scripture . . . The disciples of Christ had a notion about the kingdom of God; whence did they learn it but from the ancient Rabbins? Christ takes them off from the tradition of the elders . . . For those 2 phrases . . . 1. Of the keys [2 of binding, etc.], he takes it for granted that we take them both in the same latitude. I do not so, yet there is no opposition . . . Keys in Scripture ever relate unto authority . . . For that of binding and loosing, he saith it relates per modum prohibitionis . . . Amongst the Jews the tradition of the elders went for a law . . . Said it is always applied to things, and not to persons. I look upon this as of Chrysostom's opinion of Anathema . . . There is 2 ways of doctrinal proceeding: one of an individual person . . . but when we come to decide a case of conscience, they meddle with the person as well as with the thing.

Mr. Marshall—I desire that in this debate you will hold to that that concerns the controversy . . . You debate of the government before the law, and so little against us in that that it will not give light, and for that under the law . . .

Mr. Lightfoot — A large discourse concerning the economy before the law: the father a magistrate, the son a priest; I would gladly see it proved. 35 Gen. . . For the propriety of the priesthood, Uriah; all this is granted, but I see no government in this . . . For that of judging of the leprosy, was this any part of government? Said, priests and porters that did prohibit, a sanhe[drim]¹(?) but who appointed them but David . . . Said the kingdom of Israel was a type of the kingdom of Christ. The kingdom of David was so, but that the Sanhedrim and their government was so, I am yet to learn.

Mr. Gillespie—For the argument from the Jewish government, it doth not come home to the proposition; it is all one though it be granted, there is not par ratio; their government was so intermixed; the priests and Levites made a great part of their civil court . . . 3. I deny that, that is taken for granted, that there is no distinct government in the Jewish Church . . . We will prove from the Talmudical writers an excommunication . . . That of binding and loosing, the context carries it to persons . . . The Jews had a binding and loosing of persons, as Buxtorf tells us . . . The strength of these arguments drives at this to anticipate positive arguments.

Mr. Vines—We are now upon the right point. I desire he would not tell us how he finds in Jewish authors, but what he finds in the Word of God, whether judging finally and acting upon that judgment were not in the priests . . . Of leprosy, if a man be suspected, it's said he shall be brought to the priest, for it was a thing of great difficulty, and the priest is to pronounce him unclean, and he shall shut him up 7 days and go to see if it spread, and . . . never any reference made in cases of difficulty to the Sansider of an answer to the order of the Lords, and to make report to the Assembly with convenient speed.

Dr. Gouge moved that there shall be public thanks given cating his book³ to the Assembly, which was accordingly done by the Prolocutor.

 affirmative arguments to confirm the proposition. The Assembly debated the affirmative.

Mr. Gillespie—When the Assembly was upon the duty duty of pastors, and for proof of that, added 1 Thes. v. [12], Heb. xiii. 7, 17 . . . Jesus Christ hath appointed rulers and governors in his Church which are not magistrates . . . and officers as are church governors, and have a government committed to them distinct from the civil government, and that Christians are commanded to yield obedience thereof church officers distinct from the civil government. But,

Ordered—Mr. Palmer, Dr. Temple, Mr. Tuckney, Dr. Smith, Mr. Newcomen, Mr. Price, to be a Committee to put this text or any other into form to prove this proposition, and to propound any other texts or arguments to-morrow morning.

Mr. Lightfoot—The Church might make a civil magistrate of their own.

Mr. Marshall—This is a point of dangerous consequence for the Church to take upon them to set up a civil magistrate of their own.

Ordered—The Committee to proceed in the preparing of argument.

Sess. 622.—April 15, 1646.—Wednesday morning.

Proceed in the debate of the proposition.

Mr. Palmer urged an argument from the 18th of Matthew. If it may appear that here is a church sentence, and this is the ratification of that sentence . . . Consider the scope of these words, not to give direction for reparation of a particular injury, but the bringing of the man to repentance, which is properly an ecclesiastical thing . . . The whole chap[ter] runs in that strain. 'Christ is come to save that [which was] lost,' and 'it is not God's will that one of the little ones should perish.' . . . Christ doth not use to meddle with such things as reparation of civil injuries as Luke xii. So the words gaining thy brother, which is the constant language of the New Testament, signifies bringing them to repentance, as in many places ; not one place to be found where it is otherwise. This means is after divers attempts to bring to a judicial proceeding, therefore witnesses not arbitrators . . . The Church here can signify nothing but the Christian Church. The Sanhedrim had a power to compel the man to make satisfaction if it were a civil injury . . . If the apostle afterwards did forbid Christians to go to law before the civil magistrate, then Christ will not bid them go to the Roman governor. The Sanhedrim was near his¹ end at this time ; for 2 hundred years no Christian magistrate.

continued.

Mr. Lightfoot—That the scope is not of private injuries, that not meant of the Sanhedrim, and not of the civil magistrate, I consent to all these ; but I differ in some things . . . I question whether this place do speak anything, but referring to the ministerial function, referring to the apostles. Se[e] the story in other evangelists. Christ called the 12 unto him . . . It drives at this to temper the 12 apostles in a repute and carriage, one towards another . . . He gives caution concerning their demeanour, if others offend them . . . The offence may be a private offence . . . That concerning witnesses is not witnesses of the fact, for the offence may be private, but to be witnesses of admonition. The gaining is to repentance, to keep him from falling to exorbitancy against Christian charity . . . I cannot see a juridical censure here . . . If I construe, 'tell the Church,' the company, it may have warrant for it . . . 'Hear the Church' is the 2 witnesses ; may be of counsel as well as judicature.

Mr. Palmer—He grants very materially that urged for the scope and gaining, which are fair advantages. Three things he pitches upon. 1. It is a secret injury . . . A. It cannot be simply understood of such a secret injury, though sometimes it may be so . . . There is no possibility of a harming the Church in a secret injury, which a man will deny, be[cause] that cuts off all proceeding: therefore it is either of such . . . 2. It is a new notion to me that here should be meant none but the apostles . . . By what cogent argument can he restrain those words to the apostles; if it were particular unto them, why was it written? . . . What reason can be given why this should be observed by one apostle to another, and not one minister and one Christian to another . . . It is said before not . . . 3. For the Church, that's a new interpretation, that the apostles that had the power of binding and loosing, that they should be brought, and none else to be shamed . . . And how shall this be done if no sentence be passed, what shall they do in it . . . I grant the words do not formally signify excommunication, but it is an effect of it . . .

This text as it hath been opened and debate[d] . . .

The arguments brought from the 18th of Matthew, as it hath been 'this day' opened and debated, doth prove the proposition in debate.

Sess. 623.—April 16, 1646.—Thursday morning.

The Committee for drawing up the argument from the 18th of Matth. made report that they could not finish their report so soon, but hoped to be ready by the next sitting.

Mr. Palmer offered another argument.

Mr. Palmer—From the 1 Cor. v.—the putting away the incestuous Corinthian. It was an act of government to put any man out of a society; and . . . intimations that the like is to be done in several cases . . . First the apostle begins with the crime v. 1, in the 2d v. he shows what should have been done . . . v. 5, whether delivering to Satan may signify something more than excommunication is not now before us,—v. 7, he doth reiterate the charge to purge out the old leaven, and confirms it afterwards by a like direction concerning others—with such an one, no, not to eat, with a double negative . . . If not a civil converse with them so much as with heathens, then much less, be amongst you in ecclesiastical assemblies; and then he tells them they have power to do this.

Debate

Mr. Lightfoot—I cannot conceive this place in his sense. 1. Doubt giving up to Satan. You know how this is variously interpreted . . . 2. The taking away was extraordinary, not only in regard of scandal, but in another regard. There were divisions amongst them, and this man was cherished by one of the parties. You apply it to one equally offensive to all the Church, but I do not find that he was so.

Mr. Marshall—I desire [to speak] to the order of your debate, you would first consider whether to draw an argument from hence, be[cause] you have already taken the strength of the argument into your reason before.

Mr. Rutherford—I wonder at that conjecture of his; the incestuous persons siding with one of the factions; for the ap[ostle] doth not insinuate any such fault in him . . . Though that of traditio Satanæ be laid aside, yet it may prove excommunication which is an act of censure, proved so in other places of the chapter.

Mr. Lightfoot—The ground of my selection is to me very apparent . . . 1. There was a faction is apparent . . . and then I cannot tell how to make construction of that: ‘you are puffed up,’ and ‘your boasting is not good.’

Mr. Rutherford—Not mourned, i.e. not humbled for his sin, but rather gloried.

Mr. Palmer—He seems to me wholly to grant my argument. Grant that one of the factions did side, yet what is the result of all this, but that he be cast out and put away.

Mr. Lightfoot—I am not yet satisfied in that ‘your boasting is not good.’ I desire a clear interpretation of it. The apostle doth frame his style according to the divisions in that Church.

Dr. Smith—Their boasting was in those teachers that they had chosen to themselves, and yet they did not cast out the wicked one.

Mr. Lightfoot—I understand the putting away in opposition to cherishing, and not in reference to Church ordinances.

Mr. Rutherford—This precept is directed but to a part of the Church of Corinth by this argument; not cherishing, as a duty, belongs to single members; but in the 12 v. he speaks of a judicial censure.

Mr. Lightfoot—I conceive the judging is spoken concerning miracle.

Message from the House of Commons.

The Committee from the House of Commons came with a message from [that House].

Sir John Evelyn—The House of Commons having not long since received a paper, . . . which bore the title of a petition, they did observe many things in it hardly consistent with the nature of that title . . . But considering from whom it came and what it did pretend to, they thought it fit to take time to consider of it, and accordingly they spent several days—whole days—and afternoons deli[berating]. They did find things in it that did strike at the foundation and roots of the privileges of Parliament. Had this come from any but from this place, or from any assembled [by any other authority] . . . but they do have that respect to the persons of those that are called here, that they have commanded us to let you know that what they offer to you is with a great deal of trouble . . . The matter contained in it . . . The substance of it they have prepared questions . . . that . . . I must needs say upon a very late occasion . . . those questions being come, I wish they may not find that sense here as we have lately heard with our own ears . . . that those questions are sent . . . Those things deserve the serious consideration of all men, and [your opinions about them] will be received [by the House] with that respect that is due unto them . . . You will allow us the freedom of our reason, and liberty of our judgment . . . The House of Commons is very sensible of the faithful and useful endeavours of yourselves ; and though they had not been so often remembered of it, they would not have forgotten it . . . [We trust that no division is now to arise between us.] If there shall, you will give occasion to all the world to say that, as you were willing to serve the Parliament a while, so you were willing to have them serve you for ever after . . . We do desire that that respect hitherto borne to that House may be continued . . . I cannot but remember that as you have done that which we do acknowledge to be very useful to the Parliament, so I would not have you to forget what the Parliament hath done for you . . . Do not think the Parliament is unwilling to submit their yoke¹ to Jesus Christ ; his yoke is easy. If it be a galling, vexing yoke, it is not his, and we [will not bear it].

Mr. Fiennes—I cannot without some regret and sadness speak what now I am to deliver unto [you], but I conceive therein I do not express my own sense, but the sense of all those that sent me for . . . Having observed upon all occurrences, even particularly upon this late unhappy occasion, with what tenderness the House of Commons have always looked on this Assembly, I may with the more confidence assure [you] it is no pleasing subject about which they have been necessitated to send us ; and that it would have pleased them much better to remember you of your duties . . . and² (?) put you in mind of their privileges . . . which they are necessitated to . . . Amongst those privileges none more essential than this : that in them resides the power of making laws, and once passed all are to be subject unto them . . . shall, so soon as a law is made, set a brand upon it as contrary to the will of God and mind of Jesus Christ [and] our Covenant, what can more stifle it in the birth, and make it of none effect? So tender were the Houses in this point, and sensible of inconveniences upon [it], as that when they first took into consideration the ordinance of the calling of this Assembly, [they] expressly provided you should speak of nothing but what was propounded to you by both Houses, or deliver your advice but in such a way and so often [as they should ask for it] . . . Can it therefore enter into the thought of any man that the Houses, having with so much reason and circumspection settled [your powers] . . . Can any imagine that by the second ordinance, whereby they will you to be ratified, they let all loose again and authorise you to offer what you would as often as you would without any limit? or can any man imagine that after, in pursuance of this 2nd order, you had given your advice about church government, and that in this particular, and so fixed it as by the divine right, that after this, under colour of this order, as you had done before, so again interpose your opinion, and that in order to making of a law, yea of retracting a law so lately settled with great deliberation . . . Can any man call that to be an advice, or rather a controlling and contradiction of what was already done? . . . Did the Houses of Parliament give any colour of power to this Assembly to give any interpretation of the national covenant, especially in relation to making of laws? Did it give authority to this Assembly to give their judgment after a law settled? . . . Not a particular member may speak against a vote without leave, and shall [you claim] not only to debate, but to arraign and condemn it, nay to pass the highest doom upon it, that it [is] contrary to the will of God and the national Covenant? Truly, had you but exceeded the power granted by Parliament, yet what was more amounted to the breach of privilege of Parliament. Not that the breach of every ordinance is a breach of privilege, but the breach of such an ordinance as gives power to do such a thing, without which you could not have done it . . . Now, for any without authority to interpose their advice is to encroach upon that which is proper to the great counsel of the kingdom: therefore whatever is more, exceeding it, you have broken the privileges of Parliament. How much more to set up judgment against judgment, altare contra altare, tie them up to a particular sense, and that under pain of breaking God's law, and incurring the censure of breach of Covenant . . . To arm the hands of the subjects against the authority and power of the Parliament, every one knoweth what it is; and to arm the hearts and consciences against it is the next kin to it, and the one but the high road to the other . . . The Parliament doth not pretend to an infallibility of judgment, and the Parliament suppose this Assembly will not do so neither. If, therefore, the question be but of a human judgment subject to error, preserved only by means common, they must and do claim privilege that they have the supreme judgment in making laws . . . Whether a man's reason and judgment be not sovereign within itself, is not the question at this present, [but] whether a law should stand according to your mind or theirs that made it . . . You do not petition for your own interest, but for all the kingdom . . . What you do as an Assembly must relate to the generality of the kingdom . . . You are not to make use of the public character the Houses have put upon you, to contradict to their votes . . . Why would you have, as it were, the last word of a Parliament? . . . Some things you may do as an Assembly, not as private men; other things you may do as private men, and not as an Assembly . . . The influence of an Assembly upon a kingdom is far greater than [that of private men] . . . It is one thing for a man to desire an ease and exemption from the law where it pincheth it . . . It's one thing to desire an exemption, another to desire . . . Something in the matter . . . That all power in all causes should be derived from them. You derive it in part from Jesus Christ, to the presbyteries. For that concerning the divine right, though the Houses have not been so positive, yet till that be made clear unto them . . . The question is not whether subject[s] may petition against a law and the Privilege of Parliament is a word not usual . . . What a breach of Privilege is—privilegium personæ et curiæ . . . [1] Of the person every member of the Lords' House of Commons¹ hath a personal privilege for his person. [2] Curia. If any man deny the power and jurisdiction of the court, this is a breach of privilege. Our ancestors have been very severe [in punishing this]. Decimo octavo of Edward the First—the Earl of Cornwall coming into the hall, Hugo de Clare delivered him a paper to appear personally before the Archbishop of Canterbury. The party that did it for the trespass done did pay £2000 to the King, 1000 marke to the Lord, and submitted himself to fine and ransom . . . Since in later times tricesimo sexto of H. 8 a servant of the King's arrested to the Counter (?) a Parliament man. The House of Commons sent for him; the Sheriffs would not deliver him . . . It was resolved that this was a wrong done to the King and kingdom and . . . for the contempt of the court . . . to the House of Commons a member of their own House. 23d of Queen Elizabeth, one Mr. Hall wrote a book against the power of the Parliament; this was a breach of the privilege of Parliament . . . This is only to explain this, that there is such a thing as breach of privilege of Parliament. This [offence of yours] is in respect of both; . . . a contempt of the court and of the persons, inasmuch as they are judged as to the Covenant . . . Suppose in primo of Q. Eliz[abeth] that all the Bishops and clergy in that time disagreeing to that passed in the Lords' House, if they had come into the Convocation, and put it to the question whether this ordinance be according to the Word of God or no . . . But wherein is this breach? Doth not this petition deliver your opinions that in your consciences this is against the Word of God . . . As the exceeding of your power reflects upon the power of the Parliament or persons of Parliament . . . You will not say we are bound to judge as you do. A case something near this . . . By disaffirming that the Parliament did . . . 7 year of Hen. 8 a law made that such as should commit such an offence should have no clergy . . . An Abbot at Paul's Cross said this law was made against the law of God . . . The King took this into consideration at the effectual instance of Lords and Commons . . . Dr. Standish being but sent for by the Convocation for pleading for the King, all the Convocation was resolved on (?) a premunire . . . It is hard over the young (?)¹ governments upon implications. When the questions are agreed upon, I hope we may all agree . . . You as private men may petition . . . Many a man fined and imprisoned for petitioning in the name of it . . . but who shall judge of this? Who else should judge if there be a higher court, let them judge it; but if neither, then they must judge it . . . and because we have all took the freedom . . . that there may be a settlement that these distractions may not destroy us all . . . But the great question is whether of divine right it's fit that those that are to declare it so should find it to be so? Nothing come to them yet hath satisfied them [on this] . . . Heretofore both Lords and Commons have been very serious in considering of anything offered to be jure divino . . . Many things offered to the Parliament jure divino that the Parliament hath been very careful to weigh and consider . . . and is it not cause they should? . . . If it be of God, it must not alter . . . It is much pressed for the point of the Covenant. We all agree that the Word of God is the rule, and must be the rule; but say there be no positive rule in the Word, are we by the Covenant bound to follow the practice of Reformed Churches in case it be against the fundamental law of the kingdom? You must interpret the Covenant so as that all parts may stand. We are bound to maintain the liberties of Parliament and kingdom. If I do any act against this I am a breaker of the Covenant. If I should encourage any by petition . . . For this of Commissioners, this unheard of word, it hath been in the English Church ever since the Conquest to judge of ecclesiastical things. 37 of Queen Elizabeth, the judges did resolve that the King¹ might grant a Commission in ecclesiastical causes to determine spiritual causes . . . 37 of H. 8 . . . It is the doctrine of the Pope to take from princes the power that God committed to them, to judge of the maladministration . . . For this exorbitant power we have smarted for it, and you have smarted with it . . . If arbitrary judgment, what confusion will there be; one parish judges one way, another another. And for those powers, how unfit at this time is the kingdom of England to judge in this case. There are other things which . . . They do hope that this was rather thorough² mistake than wilfully; though it be against the order of the House to consider of the petition . . . yet to satisfy they have framed several questions.

Sir John Evelyn—It is far from them to dishonour or disoblige you. They hope after this they shall not be troubled with anything of this nature . . . To go on in a prudential way so long, it is much like to that of him who would persuade a man to . . . [We are instructed] to read and to leave those Q[ueries] with you.

Sir Benjamin Rudyard—The matter you are now about, the jus divinum, is of a formidable and tremendous nature. Testament [such a pattern]. The first rule is, 'Let all things be done decently and in order,' to edification. Decency and order are variable, and therefore cannot be jure divino; discipline is but the hedge. I desire you would make your answer in plain terms. I have heard it often very well said, the present Assembly are pious and learned men, but a Parliament is to make laws for all sorts of men . . . It hath been often objected this power is so strongly opposed be[cause] it makes a strict discipline . . . We are pres[s]ed [as] to our Covenant. I believe we have done nothing against the Word of God, neither do all the churches agree throughout . . . The civil magistrate is a church officer in every Christian commonwealth . . . In Scotland [the] nobility and gentry live commonly in the country, and so the clergy are moderated as by a scattered Parliament.

Commons.

The House, according to Order, this day, the first business, resumed the consideration of the narrative of the matter of fact concerning the breach of the Privilege of Parliament, by the last petition of the Assembly of Divines, the which was voted clause by clause, and was in hac verba, viz.—

A Narrative of the Matter of Fact concerning the Breach of the Privilege of Parliament by the Petition of the Assembly of Divines.

The Parliament, by the fundamental laws and constitutions of this kingdom, hath this great Privilege, to be the supreme Judicatory; and hath jurisdiction in all causes, spiritual and temporal, and to delegate so much of this power as they think fit; and when they have declared their Judgments and given their directions in a law, the same is binding to all persons of this kingdom, of what quality soever.

The Assembly of Divines, called by Ordinance of Parliament, are authorized and enjoyed by the said Ordinance, from time to time, during this present Parliament, or until further order be taken by both the said Houses, to treat of such matters therein mentioned as shall be proposed unto them, from time to time, by both or either of the Houses of Parliament, and no other; and to deliver their opinions and advices, of or touching the matters aforesaid, as shall be most agreeable to the Word of God, to both or either of the said Houses, from time to time, in such manner and sort as by both or either of the said

Sess. 632.—May 1.—Friday morning.

Houses shall be required; with a prohibition, that they do not assume to exercise any jurisdiction, power, or authority, ecclesiastical whatsoever, or any other power, than what in the said Ordinance is particularly expressed. Statement of House of Commons.

The Assembly are further authorized, by Ordinance of Parliament, the twelfth of October 1643, to treat among themselves of such a discipline and government as may be most agreeable to God's holy Word, and most apt to procure and preserve the peace of the Church at home, and nearer agreement of the Church of Scotland and other Reformed Churches abroad; and to deliver their opinions and advices therein, with all convenient speed, to the Houses: whereupon they gave their advice, before the Houses declared their judgment in the Ordinance for Commissioners.

The Parliament having received the advice of the Assembly concerning presbyterial government; and particularly, that Jesus Christ hath placed in the ministers and elders of his Churches the power of keeping away scandalous and unworthy persons from the Lord's table; Both Houses, after mature deliberation had thereupon, did, notwithstanding, ordain by a law, that, in cases not enumerated, the Commissioners by them to be appointed according to the said law should exercise so much of the said power as in that law is provided. The Assembly are not authorized, as an Assembly, by any Ordinance or Order of Parliament, to interpret the Covenant, especially in relation to any law made or to be made; nor, since the law passed both Houses concerning the Commissioners, have been required by both or either of the Houses of Parliament, or had any authority before by Parliament, to deliver their opinions to the Houses in matters already judged and determined by them: neither have they power, either to debate or vote, whether what is passed as a law by both Houses be agreeing or disagreeing to the Word of God, until they be thereunto required.

Matter of Fact arising from the Petition itself.

The Assembly of Divines, under the name of a petition, dated March 23d, 1645, attested by the Prolocutor and the two Scribes;

First, Do oppose their judgment, as an Assembly, in relation to a law passed both Houses, unto the judgment of Parliament, being not thereunto authorized nor required; affirming, that the Provision of Commissioners to judge of scandals, not enumerated, appears to their consciences to be so contrary to that way of government which Christ hath appointed in his Church, in that it giveth power to judge of Persons to come to the sacrament, unto such as Christ hath not given that power; and to be, in many respects in the said petition mentioned, so disagreeable to the Covenant, that they dare not practise according to that provision.

Secondly, The Assembly, in their petition, do declare that the power of judging in cases not enumerated (placed, in part, by the said laws in Commissioners), and to keep back from the sacrament all such as are notoriously scandalous, doth belong to the several Elderships by divine right, and by the will and appointment of Christ; excluding thereby the said Commissioners, and in them the Parliament, from the power and right to judge in cases of scandal not enumerated. This being taken into consideration by the House of Commons, after a long and serious debate had thereupon, they have

Lord Wariston—You have a business that concerns Christ most of anything on earth, and it concerns the 3 kingdoms . . . It will be the means of continuing or ending of our troubles. When the greatest business is before you [every member should do his utmost to attend the meetings]. . . . Never was such a thing demanded before ; the benefit of an Assembly is by mutual debate and consultation . . . I wish that every one would put aside all excuses [and attend].

Lord Wariston—Having the honour to be assisting to this debate, and not able to attend at all times, I beg your patience . . . I am glad it is before you, glad to hear the willingness of the Parliament to give Christ his full right and due. Now they have laid it on your shoulders, it lies at your door . . . All men are bound to give a testimony to the truth when called to it. But it is your function . . . In former times Christ hath gotten testimonies to [his] prophecy¹ and priesthood, now he looks for it to his kingdom. . . . Christ is born for a crown, and now are all born² to this end, to give testimony to this . . . Said well yesterday many may do as private persons . . . When not only the magistrate calls you . . . but by their own good example they did assert before you their civil rights and privileges . . . A ground to you fully to assert the privileges of Jesus Christ. . . . I hope it will be seen to all the world. There can be no question you have a committee³ both from God and man to consider . . . If this be a part of that kingdom which to come we daily pray, then it is . . . In this there is no prudential waiving of the business, but a full, clear, plenary declaring of the truth . . . The salvation of souls . . . but the happiness of churches is more . . . but in this you have that that is far above them all . . . His (?) anger is the greatest . . . The Assembly their serving of the Parliament will by no means be to serve themselves. All your endeavours will be to serve Him who rules over all . . . We may hear of breach of Covenant in civil privileges . . . Dr. Burges, P.—I think by the order by jus divinum, they mean that which is the will and appointment of Jesus Christ.

Dr. Gouge—Jus divinum will be taken in opposition to that which is jus humanum.

Dr. Temple—The Parliament will bind us to that yourself have said, but the question is how this appointment doth appear, whether in express words or consequences, and what those consequences are.

Mr. Whitakers—I think we may prove that by the will and appointment of Jesus Christ, we do not limit it [to] express Scriptures . . . [Inquire] what is the will and appointment of Jesus Christ concerning church government.

The Fast was kept in the Assembly according to the former order . . . Prolocutor began with prayer.

A psalm was sung. Mr. Palmer began with prayer . . . Mr. Cawdry, after a short prayer, [preached from] 1 Tim. i. 19. The life of a [Christian] sometimes compared to a wayfare, warfare, seafare. Cawdry's sermon.

Wayfare, and their ministers called guides; Warfare, so our apostle bids Timothy show himself a good soldier of Jesus Christ; Seafare, as here in the metaphor used in the text, ministers are the pilots to guide and steer the ship; the apostle made use of two of the metaphors. He gives a great charge to Timothy to discharge that office of minister laid upon him, and so commends to him the instruments or weapons whereby he must maintain the fight, faith and a good conscience, but especially the latter . . . An explication of the particular words—1. What is meant by faith, taken sometimes objectively for the doctrine of faith or the gospel . . . The word is having faith; but not amiss rendered by holding, or as the Apostle in [Tit. i. 9]² holding fast . . . 4. Put away a good conscience not out of ignorance and negligence as out of knowledge . . . The word used by Stephen in Act vii.

5. Made shipwreck. We compare faith to the merchandise, and a good conscience to the ship, the jewel and cabinet, the treasure and treasury . . . An unsound heart will make an unsound judgment, a corrupt heart, a corrupt head . . . The apostle hath often pressed it. He begins in this chapter 5, 6, 7 v. with¹ pure heart, good conscience. Chap. iii. 9 implying unless the conscience be kept pure, the gospel will not long stay there. 1 Tim. vi. 5, Men of corrupt minds destitute of the truth . . . 2 Tim. iii. 8 . . . Psalm xiv. 1, etc., Zeph. iii. 4 . . . Reasons: 1. Sinful lusts allowed by an impure conscience. They do hinder true spiritual light. Of all things that open the way for spiritual light, repentance is one of the first . . . 2 Tim. ii. 25 . . . Repentance is the minister's best comment upon his text, and the hearer's best comment upon his sermon . . . Matt. v. 'The pure in heart shall see God' . . . Joh. vii. 17. 'If any man will do his will, he shall know,' etc. God suspends the influence of light to that soul that darkens itself in lusts . . . Acts ii. 26 . . . Ps. xxv. Teach the meek . . . 2. As it hinders spiritual, so it puts out natural and acquired light . . . Eph. iv. 18 . . . A wicked man and a fool are synonymous. No man is wicked but a fool, for if he were wise he would be good . . . 3. It corrupts right reason—that knowledge which men have—and turns it not only from, but against the truth . . . 1 Tim. v. 6.² . . . As it was in the Church of Rome [they] first found out a religion that might serve their pride, and then set their wits to work to maintain it . . . 4. It corrupts the affections. All judgment is lost when truth is put to the arbitrament of the affections, Joh. iii. 19. . Lest the word should correct him, he will corrupt the word, 2 Tim. iv. 3, 4 . . . It's a question whether Adam's understanding or affections were first corrupted, but with our our understand[ing]s, corrupt affections, and affections corrupt understandings . . . True, Solomon saith, without knowledge the mind cannot be good, and as true that the head cannot be good [if] the heart be corrupt . . . 2. We may cease to wonder to consider how many errors there are in the world against the clear truths of God, 1 Tim. ii. 4 . . . Look upon the prevalency of Popery in former times. We cannot but wonder how many did fall off to the apostacy of the See of Rome. The Church of Rome [is represented in Rev. xvii. 4 as] a harlot that hath a cup of fornication in her hand, and it is a golden cup . . . Look upon these later times . . . How many do fall away from the old truths. A sad observation that the professing part of the Church of England were like a fair looking-glass all of one piece, but one image to be seen in it, but now look, all in pieces. This is not only by the vulgar sort of people, but by the ancient and great professors of opinion. Their hearts were rotten and corrupt before, and now their heads are corrupt . . . 2 Tim. ii. . . . Avoid profane and vain babblings . . . Instanced in one example of Hymenæus and Philetus, who denied the resurrection, to still and quiet their conscience . . . So many of those opinions are for some such reason as this . . . What do you think of that doctrine, the immortality of the soul? . . . That of . . . A lust that betrays men into most of the errors in these times . . . Lust after liberty . . . Gal. v. 13 . . . There is a possibility in the nature of men to run after liberty . . . Marquess
 admitted.

The Assembly was informed that the Marquess of Argyll was without. An order for it² was read from the Lords and Commons.

Ordered—Mr. Marshall, Mr. Sedgwicke, Mr. Ny, Mr. Perne, to bring him in. Earl of Argyll delivered a letter from the Assembly of Scotland. The letter was read.

Prolocutor spake unto him: In the midst of all difficulties . . . we have ever found encouragement from that . . . famous religious and pure Church implanted in that kingdom . . . We have found it abundantly in this place . . . And to crown all the rest, it is the joy of our hearts to find a person of so great and famous renown and honour . . . in which the greatest safety of the kingdom of Scotland is reposed . . . But we look not upon those things of greatest eminency and observation . . . we look upon your lordship as one of the greatest instruments under God [for the forwarding of this work.]

Sess. 677.—July 22, 1646.—Wednesday morning.

The Prolocutor being dead, an order was brought from both Houses for Mr. Herle to be Prolocutor. It was read, and he called to the chair. And the House desired the Assembly to hasten the Confession of Faith and Catechism.

R. ¹⁵/₁₄—Mr. Harris to preach for the Prolocutor at his funeral. Ordered—The day to be Friday in the afternoon. Ordered—The Committee for Westminster College be desired that his body may be interred in some con-

Sess. 762.—December 25, 1646.—Friday morning.

Lord Chancellor¹ [of Scotland] came into the Assembly [and spoke as follows]: The desires of the Church and kingdom of Scotland to assist their brethren moved them to enter into a league, and send in an army in pursuance of those ends. Some of us have had the honour . . . The Scotch army is to return; and I hope they will remove very speedily with that zeal . . . There is a Parliament now sitting at Edinburgh . . . Some of our number are to render them an account of our negoti[at]ions . . . [I beg] to acknowledge with all gratefulness the zeal, piety, and indefatigableness . . . your respects to our nation, your civility and real favours . . . What hath been already concluded in Reformation, . . . there is so solid a foundation laid of a lasting unity, as we are confident no power will be able to overturn it . . . If you have any commands to lay upon us to . . .

Scotch Commissioners take leave.

Lord Wariston—I intend. . . I owe that respect.

Mr. Baillic—Nothing to add. I cannot but heartily acknowledge the favours and respect I have found here . . . For all I can return nothing but the promise of a double duty: 1. To profess the great piety, wisdom [manifested in this Assembly], I² more than this day are to be found in any one place of the whole world . . . 2. I shall make constant mention of this worthy Synod in my prayers, both public and private. In this duty I have the concurrence of very many. I leave my best wishes with the whole company, and with every one of my dear and gracious brethren.

Dr. Burges—Mr. [Prolocutor], you see and hear what great cause we have to be thankful . . . You know how long they have been employed [in this work], how diligent [they have sence, assistance, and countenance, this Assembly doth command me to make tender of [their acknowledgments] how much they have been dignified with your presence and assistance; we have had much encouragement both from your L^{ps}' presence and assistance . . . We are confident the whole kingdom will by their counsel¹ represented make a due and thankful acknowledgment of your faithfulness; and therefore [we] presume not to undertake and anticipate that great task, which becomes a great deal better

 . . . and yet though here, in another sphere, we cannot be ignorant . . . though it be not our profession, insensible of the long marches(?), many lives sacrificed, and many sieges, successes, victories, and battles. . . . Had you but met us with bread and water in your hands to have refreshed us, it had been a matter of great obligation. But you met us with your blood in your hands. Next under God whom we serve [in the gospel of his Son], we ascribe the happy posture that things are now in to that covenant . . . It's a cause² is worthy the sacrifice of lives, because it is God's cause . . . We do all retain such impressions of his memory,³ as that no cause but that could be worthy of a life so precious. We must with all humility acknowledge, as we have found great encouragement and assistance . . . Our humble suit is, that we may be confident in your necessary absence . . . you would afford your noble testimony to this Assembly, that the difficulties we encounter withal,

It's our great comfort that yet you leave behind you 2 such pledges of the love of the nation¹ . . . ¹ I subjoin here from the Journals of the House of Commons the notice of the presentation of the Catechisms with proofs, and of the subsequent proceedings of the House in regard to both, so far as I have been able to trace them:—

‘The House being informed that divers divines of the Assembly were at the door desiring to present something to the House; they were called in, and Dr. Burges acquainted the House that the Assembly, according to the Order of this House, had perfected their advice concerning a Catechism; and had fixed their proofs out of Scripture. The divines withdrew. Ordered—That, as formerly, 600 copies of the Catechism, with the texts of Scripture affixed, be forthwith printed in the same manner as other things, presented from the Assembly of Divines, were formerly ordered to be printed for the use of the Houses and the Assembly only. Ordered—That thanks be given to the Assembly of Divines for their care and pains in this service. The divines of the Assembly were called in: and Mr. Speaker, by command of the House, acquainted them with the Order concerning the printing of 600 copies of the Catechism, with the texts of Scripture in the margin, for the use of the Houses of Parliament and the Assembly only, as formerly; and that he was commanded to give them the thanks of the House for their care and pains herein’ [p. 530]. ‘Ordered—That no man do print any copies of the late Catechism presented from the Assembly of Divines without order and licence of this House; and that Mr. Byfield do take care thereof [p. 557]. . . . According to former Order, the House took into consideration the Humble Advice of the Assembly of Divines concerning a Larger Catechism; and it is Resolved, etc.—That this House doth agree to the question and answer following, viz. [p. 633; but no question or answer follows]. Ordered—That as to the word “usury” in the paragraph of the Large Catechism, [it] be recommitted to the Assembly of Divines to explain what they mean by the word “usury” in that place, and to return their opinions to the House . . . Ordered—That the clause, viz. “aggravating smaller faults, hiding, excusing, or extenuating sins when called to a free confession,” be recommitted to the Assembly of Divines to explain their meaning thereby; and they are to return their sense thereupon to the House forthwith. Resolved, etc.—That these words in the 10th, 11th, and 12th lines in the 42d page [among sins forbidden by the ninth Commandment], “aggravating smaller faults, hiding, excusing, or extenuating sins when called to a free confession,” be omitted and left out in the said Catechism . . . According to former Order, the House proceeded in reading the Larger Catechism; and the same being read, upon the Question assented unto and ordered to be sent unto the Lords for their concurrence, and it is Ordered—That the Lords be desired to concur with this House that the said Catechism be forthwith printed and published [p. 645]. . . . A message from the Lords . . . The divines of the Assembly have tendered a title to be prefixed to the Shorter Catechism, which the Lords approve of, and desire the concurrence of this House [p. 686]. An Order for printing the Shorter Catechism and the title thereto were read, and agreed unto, with a proviso for the continuance of restraining the printing of this Catechism, that it shall continue for a twelve-month and no longer; and it is Ordered—That the Lords’ concurrence be desired herein [vol. vi. p. 27]. Sir Antony Irby carried to the Lords, for their concurrence, the Ordinance for printing the Little Catechism, which was returned to the Lords with one proviso thereunto added, that the same should continue for six months, no longer [p. 32]. Sir Antony Irby brings answer that the Lords do agree . . . to the Ordinance for printing the Little Catechism’ [p. 33]. The Ordinance itself is not given at length in the Journals of the House of Commons, but it will be inserted in the note on p. 513, as it is found in the Journals of the House of Lords.

respecting them :—‘ A message was brought from the House of Commons by Sir Robert Harley, Knight, who brought up a vote for approving of the Large and Short Catechism presented to them from the Assembly of Divines, wherein they desire their Lordships' concurrence. The answer returned was : To the . . . vote concerning the approving of the two Catechisms their Lordships will take the same into consideration, and will send an answer by messengers of their own' [p. 394]. ‘Next the Shorter Catechism was read the third time and agreed to, and ordered to be printed and published. by Mr. Boyce, to desire their Lordships would expedite the passing of the Larger Catechism. The answer returned was, that this House will take their message into speedy consideration, and send an answer by messengers of their own' [p. 573]; but no answer had been sent up to Feb. 6th, 1648–9, when, in consequence of the vote in the House of Commons, the sittings of the House of Lords were discontinued. In the course of his negotiation with the two Houses in the autumn of 1648, the king offered to license the printing of the Shorter Catechism with a suitable preface; but as the treaty was broken off, this was never done.

The Larger Catechism, without proofs, was printed before Rutherford left London, and probably was brought down by him. At any rate, it was reprinted in Edinburgh before the close of the year, and along with the Directory for Church Government, and the CXL Propositions, was transmitted to presbyteries, to be examined and reported on by them to the General Assembly which was to meet in Edinburgh in July 1648. Ord.—Mr. Rastall be approved. Ordered—Mr. Prichard be returned as insufficient. Ordered—Mr. Albright be respited. Ordered—Mr. Lawson be examined. Ordered—Letters shall be sent to the members of the Assembly [to secure a full Assembly].

God, and in nothing contrary to the received doctrine, worship, discipline, and government of this Kirk ; a necessary part of the intended uniformity in religion, and a rich treasure for increasing knowledge among the people of God : and therefore the Assembly, as they bless the Lord that so excellent a Catechism is prepared, so they approve the same, as a part of uniformity ; agreeing, for their part, that it be a common Catechism for the three kingdoms, and a Directory for catechising such as have made some proficiency in the knowledge of the grounds of religion.'

'The General Assembly having seriously considered the Shorter Catechism agreed upon by the Assembly of Divines sitting at Westminster, with assistance of Commissioners from this Kirk ; do find, upon due examination thereof, that the said Catechism is agreeable to the word of God, and in nothing contrary to the received doctrine, worship, discipline, and government of this Kirk. And therefore approve the said Shorter Catechism, as a part of the intended uniformity, to be a Directory for catechising such as are of weaker capacity.'

These Acts, along with that in approbation of the Confession of Faith, were ratified by the Estates of the Scottish Parliament on 7th February 1649. Their Act, which has been already given (p. 421), was repealed in 1661; and no express mention is made of the Catechisms in Act V. Parl. 1690, which anew ratified the Confession of Faith, and established Presbyterian government in Scotland. Both, however, continue to have ecclesiastical sanction ; and the use of the Shorter Catechism as a means of instructing the young in the knowledge of Christian truth has been often and urgently enjoined on parents, teachers, and ministers by the Assemblies of the Church.

[NOTE.—This is the last of the sessions that is numbered, and after this date the Assembly was little more than a Committee for the examination of ministers. No trace of the presence of a Scotch Commissioner is found in these Minutes after 9th November 1647 ; but in the Life of Mr. Robert Blair it is recorded that in October 1648 he 'was sent from the Commission of the Kirk to London for promoting the work of Reformation, etc. There was sent with him from the Committee of Estates, Lothian, William Glendinning, and Sir John Chiesley, unto the Parliament, as Mr. Blair was sent to the Assembly of Divines, and to attend these three Commissioners,' etc. (p. 211). From the Journals of the House of Commons it appears that the letter of the Commissioner of the General Assembly was laid before that House, and that it was resolved by them 'that Mr. Blaire be admitted to the Assembly of Divines,' and that the Lords' concurrence thereto was to be desired (vol. vi. p. 61). It is not recorded in the Journals of the House of Lords, however, that their concurrence was given, and no mention is made of Mr. Blair in these Minutes. The probability rather is, that after his repeated avoidance of Cromwell he did not obtain leave to sit in the Assembly any more than to visit the King. His biographer says that the King, being refused the company of his own chaplains during his close imprisonment, 'did at last, shortly before his death, earnestly desire that Mr. Blair might be permitted to come to him, and be with him at his death ;' but 'he could not obtain liberty, nay, not so much as to speak with the King ;' and he often afterwards said, that if he had obtained liberty to be with the King at his death, 'he was resolved so to speak and carry on the scaffold, testifying against that horrid murder, that he laid his account to die with the King' (p. 215).

It is only due to the Assembly of Divines to state, that though no reference to the sad events then occurring is found in their Minutes, it is known that almost to a man they shared the sentiments of the King's Scotch chaplain. Neal states that Hugh Peters was sent by the officers of the army to endeavour to gain them over, or at least persuade them to remain neutral ; 'but they declared unanimously for the release of the King.' Soon after, those of them whose charges lay in London or the neighbourhood, in concert with many other ministers about the city, drew up first a serious and faithful representation of their judgment, and then a vindication of themselves from aspersions cast on them, in both of which they protested in the most emphatic manner against the army's drawing on themselves and the kingdom the blood of the sovereign.]

APPENDIX.

NO. I.—WESTMINSTER ASSEMBLY'S PREFACE TO THE XXXIX ARTICLES.

IN note 2, p. 357, it has been mentioned that this preface has not been entered either in the Minutes of the Assembly or in the Journals of the Houses of Parliament. The articles which were revised by them have been often reprinted. They appear, however, to have been so, not in the exact form in which they were sent up by the Assembly, but in the form in which, by authority of the Houses, they were inserted among the propositions sent to the King in the Isle of Wight. The only difference of the least moment between the two is, that the former contains a revision of Article viii. on the three creeds, which is omitted in the other. It is given below, after the preface, from a volume of tracts (E 516) in the Library of the British Museum. The other fourteen articles revised by the Assembly may be found in the Appendices to Neal's and Stoughton's Histories, and in Hall's Harmony of Protestant Confessions. They appear to have been constituted by the Houses a sort of negative Confession, containing those Christian verities against which no minister of any tolerated sect was allowed to preach. The preface of the Assembly shows distinctly that the need for a new Confession was acknowledged by the English as well as by the Scotch members of Assembly.

The Proceedings of the Assembly of Divines upon the Thirty-nine Articles of the Church of England.

To the Honourable House of Commons assembled in Parliament.

The Assembly at their first sitting received an order from both the Honourable Houses of Parliament, bearing date July 5, 1643, requiring them to take into their consideration the ten first articles of the Thirty-nine Articles of the Church of England, to free and vindicate the doctrine of them from all asper-sions and false interpretations. In obedience whereunto, they forthwith took the said ten first articles into consideration. Afterwards they received another order for the nine next following; and accordingly took the same into consideration. But being limited by the same orders only to the clearing and vindicating of them, though we found ourselves necessitated for this end to make some, yet we made fewer alterations in them, and additions to them, than otherwise we should have thought fit to have done, if the whole matter had been left to us without such limitation, conceiving many things yet remaining to be defective, and other expressions also fit to be changed. And herein we proceeded only to the finishing of fifteen articles, because it pleased both Houses, by an order bearing date October 12, 1643, to require us to lay aside the remainder, and enter upon the work of Church Government. And afterwards, by another order, to employ us in framing a Confession of Faith for the three kingdoms, according to our Solemn League and Covenant; in which Confession we have not left out anything, that was in the former articles material, necessary to be retained. Which having finished and presented to both Houses, we should have forborne the tendering of these fifteen articles (both as a piece several ways imperfect, and the whole as relating only to the Church of England), but that we were commanded otherwise by an order of the Honourable House of Commons, bearing date December 7, 1646. According whereunto we present them as followeth:—

ARTICLE VIII.—Of the three Creeds.

The creeds that go under the name of the Nicene Creed, Athanasius' Creed, and that which is commonly called the Apostles' Creed, are thorowly to be received and believed, for that they may be proved by most certain warrant [sic] of Holy Scripture.

Lightfoot in his Journal gives the article probably as it stood at an earlier stage of the debate, the last clause reading, 'for that the matter of them may be proved by most certain warrants of Holy Scripture.'

No. II.—COMMITTEE FOR PLUNDERED MINISTERS
—SEQUESTRATIONS.

Soon after the commencement of the Civil War, numbers of the Puritan ministers whose benefices lay in the districts occupied by the Royalist troops, being exposed to the harshest usage, or even stripped of their property and driven from their homes, came to London, and applied to Parliament for relief from the sad state to which they had been reduced. The House of Commons, on 31st December 1642, appointed a Committee 'to consider of the fittest way for the relief of such godly and well-affected ministers as have been plundered; and likewise to consider what malignant persons have benefices here, in and about this town, whose livings being sequestered, these may supply their cures, and may receive their profits.' On 27th July 1643

this Committee was further authorized to consider of informations against scandalous ministers, though there were no malignancy proved against them, and to put out of their cures those whose scandal was sufficiently proved. By an Ordinance, of date 22d January 1643-4, the Earl of Manchester was empowered to appoint Committees in all the associated counties, who might call before them 'all ministers and schoolmasters' 'that were scandalous in their lives, or ill-affected to the Parliament, or fomentors of this unnatural war.' And by a resolution of the House, of date 7th July 1645, the Committee for Plundered Ministers were instructed 'to consider of some means for providing a competent maintenance for settling a good ministry in such counties and places as shall desire it.' Four of the Order Books of the Committee are still preserved in the Record Office in London. These relate almost exclusively to this last part of their commission. This they appear to have carried out systematically, requiring delinquent laymen, who held improper rectories, or had long leases of tithes at nominal rents, to surrender a part of their profits. These were appropriated to increase the income of the minister of the parish, or of some neighbouring chapel, or to found a lectureship in some neighbouring market town. While they diminished the revenues of the Church by the alienation of the temporal lands of the bishops and cathedral clergy, not even Archbishop Laud himself could have laboured more strenuously than this Committee of a Puritan Parliament to recover the tithes, or seized more eagerly the opportunity the civil war had brought them of securing considerable augmentations to many of the smaller benefices, by requiring at least partial restitution of alienated tithes. The largest of the four volumes contains about 800 orders for restitution in part of the tithes out of the estates of 'delinquents.' As the ministers put into sequestrations, as well as those appointed to lectureships and augmented livings, were required to be examined by the Westminster Assembly, and as there is constant reference to this Committee in the Minutes, I append two or three extracts from these order books, to show how they carried on the somewhat miscellaneous work entrusted to them. The first relates to the settlement of a minister in the living sequestered from a 'scandalous minister;' the second secures the fifth part of the living to the wife and children of the sequestered minister, and provides that the sequestration shall be void if the fifth is not regularly paid over ; the others secure grants of tithes from the forfeited estates of delinquent laymen.

1. My Lord of Manchester's Order for Settling the Parsonage and Vicaridge of Godney.

Whereas Mr. William Howe, minister of Godney in the county of Lincolne, hath attended the Assembly of Divines by my direction, and they having tryed his abilityes and sufficiencies, found him to be every way well qualified for the ministry, I doe therefore, according to the Ordinance of Parliament, and upon the humble request of the parishioners of Godney aforesaid, authorize and appoint the said Mr. William Howe to officiate and exercise the office of a minister, and to preach and catechize there ; And I do likewise authorize and appoint the said Mr. William Howe, or such as he shall appoint, to take into his possession the parsonage house, glebe lands, and vicaridge there, And from henceforth to demand, receive, and take up of the parishioners of Godney all such tythes, profitts, immunities, and rents as are or shall be due and belonging to the said parsonage and vicaridge there, in as ample manner as any other heretofore received and enjoyed the same, and hereby requiring all officers and soldiers in the countie of Lincolne, as all chief constables, petty constables, and other His Majesty's officers, to be ayding and assisting to you for the taking and receiving of said tythes and profitts, in case they be refused by the parishioners of Godney aforesaid. And for soe doing these presents shall be your and their warrant.

Given under my hand and seale this 14th day of March 1643[-4].

MANCHESTER.

2. A Cobby of the Order for the Ffifth Part.

Whereas certain articles have been exhibited unto and proved upon oath before the Committee for examination of scandalous ministers within the county of Lincolne, for many misdemeanours committed by Doctor Weemes, Parson of Godney, in the said county of Lincolne ; whereupon I have eicted him out of his said parsonage, and have appointed sequestrators to receive the tythes and profitts thereof : And whereas Jane Weemes, wife of the said Dr. Weemes, hath by her petition desired to have some maintenance for herself and children out of the tythes and profits thereof, I do therefore, according to the Ordinance of Parliament, order and appoint that the said Mrs. Weemes shall be paid the ffift part of the value of the said parsonage of Godney, as the value thereof shall be certified upon the oaths of credible witnesses before the committee of the said county of Lincolne, which said ffift part shall be paid by the sequestrators and others that do receive or enjoy the profitts and tythes thereof, quarterly, the first payment at Michaelmas next, or within one , and so to continue for and during [the sequestration of] sayd Dr. Weemes. And I doe hereby require the sequestrators and others that receive the tythes and profitts thereof, that they pay the said ffift part, according as I have hereby appointed, which, in case they refuse to doe, I doe then order the sequestration thereof to be voyd.

Given under my hand and seal the nynth day of September 1644.

MANCHESTER.

3. Grant of Tithes from the Estate of a Delinquent.

At the Committee of Lords and Commons for Sequestrations, May 10, 1644.

Upon the petition of the inhabitants of Leighton Beudessert in Com. Bedford, It is thought fit and ordered by this Committee, according to an order of reference by the House of Commons, that fifty-five pounds per annum be allowed out of the tythes of the said parish in lease to the said Sr Thomas Leigh, and under sequestration for his delinquency, and alleged to be worth five hundred pounds per annum, towards the maintenance of such able, orthodox, and godly preacher there, as shall be viccar there, to be approved by the Assembly of Divines; the same to be paid to him quarterly, and to begin at Midsommer next: And the Committee for Sequestrations of the said county are desired to see the same performed accordingly.

5. Further Grant of Tithes out of Estate of same Delinquent.

At the Committee for Plundered Ministers, Augusti 12, A.D. 1648.

Whereas the Committee of Lords and Commons for sequestrations of Papists' and delinquents' estates have, by their Order of the 10th May 1644, Ordered Thirty pounds per annum out of the tithes of the villages of Heath and Reath, in the parish of Leighton Buzzard, in the county of Bedford, sequestered from Sr Thomas Leigh, lessee thereof, should be paid to and for the maintenance of such a godly and orthodox divine as should by the Assembly of Divines be approved of to officiate the cure of the chappel of Heath and Reath aforesaid: This Committee do confirm the said Order, and doe hereby order and require the sequestrators of the premisses to pay the said thirty pounds per annum out of the said tithes quarterly, together with the arrears thereof, according to the said Order of the said Committee of Lords and Commons.

Vera copia ex^a per me.

6. Grant of Tithes from another Delinquent's Estate.

. At the Committee for Plundered Ministers, Julii 4^o, Anno Domini 1646.

By virtue of an Order of both Houses of Parliament of the second of May last, It was ordered that the yearlie summe of ffifty pounds be paid out of the profitts of the impropriate Rectory of Ormschurch, in the countie of Lancaster, sequestered from the Earle of Derby, delinquent, to and for increase of the maintenance of William Dunn, minister of Ormschurch aforesaid, and ffortie pounds yearlie more out of the profits of the said Rectorie for the maintenance of an assistant to the said Mr. Dun in the said church, in regard the said parish is a market towne, and with between two and three thousand communicants, and the vicarage thereof is worth but ffortie marks per annum: And the sequestrators of the premisses are required to paie the same accordingly at such tymes and seasons of the yeare as the said profits are due and payable.

HAR. GRIMSTON.

It was originally intended to add in the Appendix brief notices of the members of the Westminster Assembly, and of the foreign divines mentioned in their Minutes, and to reprint their Confession of Faith from the earliest authentic edition. But it has been found that this would extend this volume much beyond the limits prescribed for it. And it is therefore now proposed by Professor Mitchell to publish, along with other documents connected with the Westminster Assembly, the Act calling the Assembly, brief biographical notices of the members, and a careful collection of the earlier editions of the Confession.
